

PR

3552

.A4

Class PR 3552

Book A 4

Copyright N<sup>o</sup>. _____

COPYRIGHT DEPOSIT.

MILTON'S COMUS, LYCIDAS
AND OTHER POEMS

Macmillan's Pocket American and English Classics

A SERIES OF ENGLISH TEXTS, EDITED FOR USE IN ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOLS, WITH CRITICAL INTRODUCTIONS, NOTES, ETC.

16mo

Cloth

25 cents each

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| Addison's Sir Roger de Coverley.        | Franklin's Autobiography.                  |
| Andersen's Fairy Tales.                 | Gaskell's Cranford.                        |
| Arabian Nights' Entertainments.         | Goldsmith's The Deserted Village, She      |
| Arnold's Sohrab and Rostum.             | + Stoops to Conquer, and The Good-         |
| Austen's Pride and Prejudice.           | natured Man.                               |
| Bacon's Essays.                         | Goldsmith's The Vicar of Wakefield.        |
| Bible (Memorable Passages from).        | + Gray's Elegy, etc., and Cowper's John    |
| Blackmore's Lorna Doone.                | Gilpin, etc.                               |
| Browning's Shorter Poems.               | Grimm's Fairy Tales.                       |
| Browning, Mrs., Poems (Selected).       | Hale's The Man Without a Country.          |
| Bryant's Thanatopsis, etc.              | Hawthorne's Grandfather's Chair.           |
| Bulwer's Last Days of Pompeii.          | Hawthorne's Mosses from an Old             |
| Bunyan's The Pilgrim's Progress.        | Manse.                                     |
| Burke's Speech on Conciliation.         | Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales.              |
| Burns' Poems (Selections from).         | + Hawthorne's The House of the Seven       |
| Byron's Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.     | Gables.                                    |
| Byron's Shorter Poems.                  | + Hawthorne's Twice-told Tales (Selections |
| Carlyle's Essay on Burns.               | from).                                     |
| Carlyle's Heroes and Hero Worship.      | Hawthorne's Wonder-Book.                   |
| Carroll's Alice's Adventures in Wonder- | Holmes' Poems.                             |
| land (Illustrated).                     | Homer's Iliad (Translated).                |
| Chaucer's Prologue and Knight's Tale.   | Homer's Odyssey (Translated).              |
| Church's The Story of the Iliad.        | + Hughes' Tom Brown's School Days.         |
| Church's The Story of the Odyssey.      | Huxley's Selected Essays and Addresses,    |
| Coleridge's The Ancient Mariner.        | Irving's Life of Goldsmith.                |
| Cooper's The Deerslayer.                | Irving's Knickerbocker.                    |
| Cooper's The Last of the Mohicans.      | Irving's The Alhambra.                     |
| Cooper's The Spy.                       | + Irving's Sketch Book.                    |
| Dana's Two Years Before the Mast.       | + Irving's Tales of a Traveller.           |
| Defoe's Robinson Crusoe.                | + Keary's Heroes of Asgard.                |
| De Quincey's Confessions of an English  | Kempis. à : The Imitation of Christ.       |
| Opium-Eater.                            | Kingsley's The Heroes.                     |
| De Quincey's Joan of Arc, and The Eng-  | + Lamb's The Essays of Elia.               |
| lish Mail-Coach.                        | + Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare.           |
| Dickens' A Christmas Carol, and The     | Lincoln's Addresses, Inaugurals, and       |
| Cricket on the Hearth.                  | Letters.                                   |
| Dickens' A Tale of Two Cities.          | + Longfellow's Evangeline.                 |
| Dickens' David Copperfield.             | + Longfellow's Hiawatha.                   |
| Dryden's Palamon and Arcite.            | + Longfellow's Miles Standish.             |
| Early American Orations, 1760-1824.     | + Longfellow's Miles Standish and Minor    |
| Edwards' (Jonathan) Sermons.            | Poems.                                     |
| Eliot's Silas Marner.                   | Longfellow's Tales of a Wayside Inn.       |
| Emerson's Essays.                       | + Lowell's The Vision of Sir Launfal.      |
| Emerson's Early Poems.                  | Macaulay's Essay on Addison.               |
| Emerson's Representative Men.           | Macaulay's Essay on Hastings.              |
| English Narrative Poems.                | Macaulay's Essay on Lord Clive.            |
| Epoch-making Papers in U. S. History.   | Macaulay's Essay on Milton.                |

Macmillan's Pocket American and English Classics

A SERIES OF ENGLISH TEXTS, EDITED FOR USE IN ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOLS, WITH CRITICAL INTRODUCTIONS, NOTES, ETC.

16mo

Cloth

25 cents each

-
- |   |  |
|---|--|
|  Macaulay's Lays of Ancient Rome. + Macaulay's Life of Samuel Johnson. - Malory's Le Morte d'Arthur. Milton's Comus and Other Poems. Milton's Paradise Lost, Books I. and II. + Old English Ballads. Old Testament (Selections from).   Out of the Northland. Palgrave's Golden Treasury. Parkman's Oregon Trail. Plutarch's Lives (Cæsar, Brutus, and Mark Antony). Poe's Poems. + Poe's Prose Tales (Selections from).   Poems, Narrative and Lyrical. Pope's Homer's Iliad. - Pope's Homer's Odyssey. - Pope's The Rape of the Lock. - Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies. + Ruskin's The Crown of Wild Olive and Queen of the Air. Scott's Ivanhoe. + Scott's Kenilworth. + Scott's Lady of the Lake. + Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel. + Scott's Marmion. - Scott's Quentin Durward. Scott's The Talisman. + Select Orations. Select Poems, for required reading in Secondary Schools. Shakespeare's As You Like It. + Shakespeare's As You Like It (Tudor). Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors (Tudor). + Shakespeare's Coriolanus (Tudor) + Shakespeare's Hamlet. + Shakespeare's Henry IV, Part I (Tudor) + Shakespeare's Henry V. + Shakespeare's Henry VI, Part I (Tudor). + Shakespeare's Henry VIII (Tudor). + Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar. +  |  Shakespeare's King Lear. + Shakespeare's Macbeth. + Shakespeare's Macbeth (Tudor). Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream. + Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream (Tudor). Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice. + Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice (Tudor). Shakespeare's Richard II. + Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet (Tudor). Shakespeare's The Tempest. + Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida (Tudor). Shakespeare's Twelfth Night. + Shelley and Keats: Poems. Sheridan's The Rivals and The School for Scandal. Southern Poets: Selections. Southern Orators: Selections. Spenser's Faerie Queene, Book I. Stevenson's Kidnapped.   Stevenson's The Master of Ballantrae. Stevenson's Travels with a Donkey, and An Inland Voyage. Stevenson's Treasure Island. + Swift's Gulliver's Travels. + Tennyson's Idylls of the King. + Tennyson's In Memoriam. + Tennyson's The Princess. + Tennyson's Shorter Poems.   Thackeray's English Humourists. Thackeray's Henry Esmond. + Thoreau's Walden. Virgil's Æneid. - Washington's Farewell Address, and Webster's First Bunker Hill Oration. Whittier's Snow-Bound and Other Early Poems. + Woolman's Journal. Wordsworth's Shorter Poems.  |
|---|--|

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

NEW YORK • BOSTON • CHICAGO
DALLAS • SAN FRANCISCO

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED

LONDON • BOMBAY • CALCUTTA
MELBOURNE

THE MACMILLAN CO. OF CANADA, LTD.

TORONTO

Comus, Lycidas

MILTON'S
COMUS, LYCIDAS
AND OTHER POEMS

AND

MATTHEW ARNOLD'S ADDRESS ON MILTON

EDITED WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES

BY

SAMUEL EDWARD ALLEN, A.M.

DEPARTMENT OF ENGLISH, WILLIAMS COLLEGE

New York
THE MACMILLAN COMPANY
1912

All rights reserved

PR 3552
.A4

COPYRIGHT, 1912,
By THE MACMILLAN COMPANY.

---

Set up and electrotyped. Published March, 1912.

Norwood Press
J. S. Cushing Co. — Berwick & Smith Co.
Norwood, Mass., U.S.A.

#0.25
© Cl. A 309667

As good almost kill a man as kill a good book : who kills a man kills a reasonable creature, God's image ; but he who destroys a good book, kills reason itself, kills the image of God, as it were, in the eye. Many a man lives a burden to the earth ; but a good book is the precious life-blood of a master-spirit, embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life.

— Areopagitica.

PREFACE

MATTHEW ARNOLD'S address at the unveiling of the Milton Memorial Window in S. Margaret's Church, Westminster, is included in the introduction because of its especial interest to American students of Milton.

The text contains several of Milton's poems not in the college entrance requirements. The teacher should encourage his pupils to read them, as well as others not given here. All the poems should be read once or twice without reference to the notes, and simply for the sake of understanding them in general and enjoying them. The Lady Alice was fourteen when she acted her part in Comus; her brothers were younger; and they had no annotated edition.

I have attempted to furnish all the historical, biographical, and critical material necessary for an understanding of the poems, but not to usurp the place of the teacher. He will, it is very likely, omit parts of the material here presented and amplify others. I have made no attempt at appreciation or at such subjects as an examination of Milton's vocabulary, for example, his double epithets. These the teacher will bring out in the classroom. A discussion of them may well accompany the reading aloud of the poems. Such a reading will help the pupil not only to appreciate these poems, but to use his own language more artistically and intelligently. In places the notes are somewhat dogmatic. If two or more explanations of a difficult passage are equally probable and satisfactory, one gains little and loses much by putting them all before the young student. The teacher will as a matter of course consult various editions and get the opinions of all the authorities.

Good histories of the period in which Milton lived are Green's History of the English People (The Macmillan Company), and Gardiner's The Puritan Revolution (Longmans). The shorter histories by the same authors will satisfy those pressed for time. The authoritative biography of Milton is, of course, Professor Masson's Life of Milton: narrated in connexion with the Political, Ecclesiastical, and Literary History of his Time, published in six volumes by The Macmillan Company. Briefer biographies are John Milton, by Professor W. P. Trent (The Macmillan Company); John Milton, by Mark Pattison, in the English Men of Letters (Harpers); Milton, by Dr. Richard Garnett, in the Great Writers Series (Walter Scott); and Milton, by Stopford A. Brooke, in Classical Writers (D. Appleton). The Cambridge History of English Literature, Vol. VII, contains an interesting account of Milton, but inaccurate in details. This and Dr. Garnett's biography furnish good bibliographies.

In preparing the introduction and notes I have consulted many editions of the poems. But I have turned most often to Professor Masson's edition in three volumes, published by The Macmillan Company, to Mr. Verity's (Cambridge University Press), to Professor Trent's (Longmans), and Professor Neilson's (Scott, Forsman). I am indebted to my colleague, Dr. George B. Dutton, who read and criticised the introduction; and to my wife, who has been my critic and assistant throughout the work.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
PREFACE . . . . .	ix
INTRODUCTION
I. Historical Background . . . . .	xv
II. Political and Social Aspects of Milton's Minor Poems . . . . .	xxvi
III. Life of Milton . . . . .	xxx
IV. L'Allegro and Il Penseroso . . . . .	xlvi
V. Arcades . . . . .	l
VI. Comus . . . . .	lii
VII. The Masque . . . . .	lv
VIII. Lycidas . . . . .	lx
MATTHEW ARNOLD'S ADDRESS ON MILTON . . . . .	lxv
HUMPHREY MOSELEY'S PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION OF MILTON'S POEMS . . . . .	lxxvi POEMS
At a Solemn Music . . . . .	1
On Shakespeare . . . . .	3
— L'Allegro . . . . .	4
— Il Penseroso . . . . .	11
— Arcades . . . . .	19
— Comus . . . . .	25
— Lycidas . . . . .	78
On his Blindness . . . . .	87
On his Deceased Wife . . . . .	88
NOTES . . . . .	89
INDEX . . . . .	155

INTRODUCTION

I. HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

To understand the life of Milton and to appreciate his writings one must know something of the history of England during the first sixty years of the seventeenth century. Each one of his poems reflects either the ecclesiastical or the political history of the particular time in which it was written. From L'Allegro to Lycidas the careful reader can trace the evolution of Milton from a high-minded Elizabethan, enjoying all the legitimate pleasures of an Elizabethan, to a stern Puritan, thundering condemnation of the corrupt clergy of the Established Church.

Between Milton's birth in 1608 and the execution of Charles I. in 1649 two struggles combined to agitate England. The first was ecclesiastical; the second political. These struggles did not originate during the life of Milton; the seeds of them had been sown long before. During the reign of Mary (1553-1558) many persecuted Protestants fled to the continent. There they learned the discipline and doctrines of Calvinism, among them the stern theory of predestination. The form of worship which they had adopted emphasized the intellectual side of religion to the exclusion of the emotional. To the intellect the surplice, kneeling and bowing in devotion, stained glass windows,—ceremony and form in general,—make but a weak appeal. Their appeal is to the emotions. To the Calvinist they were besides objectionable because they were used in the Church of Rome. With the abatement of persecution at the accession of Elizabeth, many of these Protestants returned from the continent, bringing with them their newly acquired hatred of the ceremonial of the Church of England. Furthermore, they objected to bishops and archbishops, as savoring of Popery. But as late as 1603 only a tenth, or thereabouts, of the members of the Established Church objected to the accustomed ritual and government.

There were thus within the National Church two fairly distinct bodies. The minority wished to bring the Church into harmony with Calvin's system, a system similar to that of the Presbyterian Church as we know it. The majority, however, was content to observe the ceremonies of the Church as they had been observed in the reign of Elizabeth. Outside the Church were the Roman Catholics and the Protestant non-conformists or Separatists. Of these last were the first settlers of New England. They believed the Church to be hopelessly corrupt. In his youth and young manhood Milton, like his father, belonged to the Established Church. Later he favored successively the Presbyterians and the Separatists or Independents. Both Roman Catholics and Separatists, as the needs of the government demanded, were persecuted during the reign of Elizabeth. For example, the Catholics suffered in 1588 when the Spanish invasion was threatening. Elizabeth was opposed to the Calvinists, too, and mainly for political reasons. Through the bishops of the Church of England, who were appointed by the Crown, she could control the clergy and thus rule the Church. A Presbyterian church, being practically a democracy, would be a menace to her power.

The second struggle mentioned above was between the people and the sovereign, or, more strictly speaking, between the Parliament and the sovereign. Under the Tudors Parliament was weak. Even in the reign of Elizabeth, however, there were signs of the coming struggle. But Elizabeth ruled too wisely, responded too promptly to the demands of her people, to let it become formidable. At her death England was still a unit; she had for the most part reigned in "harmony with popular sentiment."

When James I. came to the throne of England in 1603, he had immediately to consider the religious question. About eight hundred Puritan clergymen petitioned him for reforms within the Church. They wished him to forbid clergymen to hold appointments in two or more parishes, accept the salaries themselves, and appoint vicars at small salaries to do the work. They criticised many of the clergy as inefficient in that they could not or did not preach. And they asked for liberty. Each clergyman, they thought, should decide for himself whether or not he would wear a surplice and observe the prescribed forms. Their principal demands James scornfully rejected. And about three hundred clergymen who refused to conform were ejected from their livings. But as the Puritans were at this time comparatively few, they did not, seemingly at least, menace the throne. Furthermore, the appointment of Abbott as Archbishop of Canterbury in 1610 quieted many of the reformers. He was lax in discipline, and winked at Puritan deviations from the forms of the Church.

James had trouble also with the Roman Catholics. Early in his reign he remitted fines on Roman Catholic Recusants, those Catholics who refused to attend the services of the Established Church. The result was a very large increase in the number of Recusants. Alarmed, James banished Roman Catholic priests from London. This incited a Catholic plot, known as the Gunpowder Plot, to blow up the Parliament building and kill the members of Parliament as well as the King. The discovery of the plot led to violent persecution of the Church blamed for it. Meanwhile James had quarrelled with his Parliaments. Because he had a family, he needed more money than Elizabeth had needed. But his first Parliament, dissatisfied with his treatment of the Puritans and with the favors he showered on the Scotchmen who had followed him to England, disregarded his wants. Not being granted sufficient revenues by Parliament, James on his own authority levied duties on imports. He bargained with the Parliament concerning the surrender of the right he claimed to levy these duties, quarrelled with it on various subjects, and in 1611 dissolved it in anger, leaving the vexatious questions unsettled. As the reign of James began, so it continued and ended. He opposed a growing body of Puritans in the Church; he spent more than his income, raised money in ways not approved by his Parliaments, and consequently quarrelled with them. Therefore at his death in 1625 he left to his son Charles I. a kingdom torn by dissensions.

Charles lacked energy and capacity. He had not the tact and charity and love for his people necessary to reunite the nation. Like his father, he believed in the divine right of kings; he was obstinate in his adherence to his policies; he was not to be trusted; he made promises with no idea of keeping them. His first Parliament refused to vote sufficient money for him unless he would give up his leading adviser, Buckingham, and would select counsellors that it could trust. Charles had inherited with additions the distrust which the nation had conceived for his father. It suspected that Charles, because he had married the French Princess Henrietta Maria, who was a Roman Catholic, would favor the Catholics. Charles, however, was willing to persecute the Catholics, but not to allow Parliament a voice in the selection of his counsellors. In other words, he was not willing that Parliament rather than King should govern England. In the hope that a new Parliament would be more complaisant, he dissolved the first. But the second Parliament proceeded at once to impeach Buckingham, and was soon dissolved. Then for about two years (1626-1628) Charles ruled without a Parliament. He raised money by forced loans and by other means which to most Englishmen seemed illegal. Five knights who refused to pay the forced loan were imprisoned.

With the third Parliament which met in 1638 Charles had more trouble than with the first two, and in 1639 he dissolved it. For the next eleven years England with no Parliament had an experience of personal government. Charles ruled by means of the Star Chamber, a court which was merely an instrument for enforcing his will. He levied taxes without a Parliamentary grant, and thus goaded his people to desperation, for illegal taxation has always been to an Englishman the most irritating kind of tyranny. John Hampden, by refusing to pay a tax called ship-money, made himself a popular hero. The breach between King and people widened rapidly.

The religious quarrel continually increased in bitterness. Theology agitated all England. Before the death of James, many of the clergy and of the laity had accepted the doctrines of Arminianism, which opposed Calvinism in many places, especially, though, with reference to predestination. James, who was a Calvinist, had opposed the new doctrine, but Charles favored Arminianism. And his first Parliament impeached his Chaplain, Montague, for holding that doctrine. In 1628 Charles forbade any one to speak in public on the disputed points. This of course caused dissatisfaction. In all matters relating to the Church Charles followed the advice of William Laud, who became in 1633 Archbishop of Canterbury. Laud was a narrow-minded, exceedingly energetic man. He aimed to do only a few things, and he did them thoroughly. "I laboured nothing more," he said, "than that the external public worship of God — too much slighted in most parts of the Kingdom — might be preserved, and that with as much decency and uniformity as might be." His motto was, "Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." He wished to make the Church and the Church service as beautiful as possible and the service uniform throughout England. To the Puritan he seemed to be drawing the English Church back to Romanism, "the grim wolf with privy paw." Probably Laud did more than any other person to bring about the Civil War. In 1637 the Bishops of the Scottish Church, acting in part at least under Laud's advice, attempted to force upon that Church a prayer-book much like the English Book of Common Prayer, but more objectionable to the Puritans. The result was a riot in Edinburgh, and the abolition of Episcopacy in Scotland by an assembly acting independently of Charles.

Unable himself to put down what was practically rebellion in Scotland, Charles in 1640 called two Parliaments, the second of which met in November. This is known as the Long Parliament. It sent Laud to the Tower, and beheaded Strafford, who had shared with Laud the position of Charles's chief adviser. It passed bills which made impossible government by the King without Parliament. Had Charles been content to be merely a constitutional monarch, the Civil War would probably never have taken place. But fresh quarrels with Parliament soon occurred. In 1642 Charles entered the House of Commons to arrest five members. This breach of the privileges of Parliament brought to a head the troubles which had been agitating England for many years. In the war which followed between King and Parliament, a war which was caused partly by political questions and partly by religious, Charles was defeated. In 1649 he was beheaded.

After the execution of the monarch, the House of Commons announced that England had become a Commonwealth "without King or House of Lords," that is, it had become a kind of republic. The Commonwealth, however, never had the support of the people of England, and could not have stood a month without the backing of the army, and especially of Cromwell, the head of the army. He put down with a savage hand Royalist uprisings in Ireland and in Scotland, and showed himself in all ways masterful. But in 1653 the Parliament acted contrary to his plans, and he dissolved it. He and his officers then assembled a Parliament, called the Barebone's Parliament after Praise-God Barebone, one of its members. This body wished to rule England in accordance with the will of God, but no two of the members agreed as to what that will was. In a few months it was dissolved, and Cromwell became Lord Protector of England, with all the powers of a King. Abroad he waged successful war and gained the respect of the world; at home his government was a failure. During his Protectorate he called two Parliaments, and found them both unsatisfactory. His ideas were far in advance of his age. Discontent grew rapidly. But in September, 1658, death released him from his troubles. For a few months his son Richard succeeded him; the great majority of Englishmen, however, had concluded that the only way to turn back the rising tide of anarchy was to recall the House of Stuart to the throne. On May 29, 1660, Charles II. entered London, while practically all England shouted, "Welcome now, great Monarch, to your own."

II. POLITICAL AND SOCIAL ASPECTS OF MILTON'S MINOR POEMS

“Puritanism, when Milton began to write, was not universally apart from literature and the fine arts. In its staid and pure religion Milton’s work had its foundation, but the temple he had begun to build upon it was quarried from the ancient and modern arts and letters of Greece and Italy and England. And filling the temple rose the peculiar incense of the Renaissance. The breath of that spirit is felt in the classicalism of the Ode to the Nativity, in the love proclaimed for Shakespeare, in the graceful fancy of the Epitaph to Lady Winchester, and in the gaiety of the Ode to a May Morning. But a new element, other than any the Renaissance could produce, is here; the element that filled the Psalms of David, the deep, personal, passionate religion of the Puritan, possessing, and possessed by, God. Over against the Renaissance musick is set the high and devout strain of the first sonnet and of the Odes to Time and A Solemn Musick. Even while at Cambridge, the double being in Milton makes itself felt, the struggle between the two spirits of the time is reflected in his work. These contrasted spirits in him became defined as the political and social war deepened around his life. The second sonnet still is gay, fresh with the morn of love, Petrarca might have written it; the Allegro does not disdain the love of nature, the rustic sports, the pomp of courts, the playhouse and the land of faery, nor does the Penseroso refuse to haunt the dim cathedral. But yet, in these two poems more than in the Cambridge poems, the deepening of the struggle is felt. Milton seems to presage in them that the time would come when the gaiety of England would cease to be shared in by serious men; when the mirth of the cavalier would shut out the pleasures derived from lofty Melancholy, because they shut out the devil; as the Puritan pensiveness would be driven to shut out the pleasures of Mirth, because they shut out God. While he gives full weight in the Allegro to "unreproved pleasures free," he makes it plain in the Penseroso that he prefers the sage and holy pleasures of thoughtful sadness. These best befitted the solemn aspect of the time. A few years later, and the presage had come true. Milton is driven away from even the Allegro point of view. In

Comus the wild license of the court society is set over against the grave and temperate virtue of a Puritan life. The unchastity, the glozing lies, the glistening apparel that hid moral deformity, the sloth and drunkenness, the light fantastic round of the enchanter's character and court, are (it seems likely) Milton's allegory of the court society of his time. The stately philosophy of the Brothers which had its root in subduing passion and its top in the love of God; the virginal chastity of the lady, and at the end the releasing power of Sabrina's purity, exalt and fill up more sternly the idea of the Penseroso and symbolise that noble Puritanism which loved learning and beauty only when they were pure, but holiness far more than either. It may be, as Mr. Browne supports, that there is a second allegory within the first, of Laud and his party as the Sorcerer commending the cup of Rome by wile and threat to the lips of the Church and enforcing it by fine and imprisonment; paralysing in stony fetters the Lady of the Church. It may be that Milton called in this poem on the few who, having resisted like the Brothers, but failed to set the Church free, ought now to employ a new force, the force of Purity;

but this aspect of the struggle is at least not so clear in Comus as in Lycidas. In Lycidas Milton has thrown away the last shreds of Church and State and is Presbyterian. The strife now at hand starts into prominence, and not to the bettering of the poem as a piece of art. It is brought in — and the fault is one which frequently startles us in Milton — without any regard to the unity of feeling in the poem. The passage on the hireling Church looks like an afterthought, and Milton draws attention to it in the argument. ‘The author . . . by occasion foretells the ruin of our corrupted clergy then in their height.’ But he does not leave Laud and his policy nor the old Church tenderly. When he felt strongly, he wrote fiercely. The passage is a splendid and a fierce cry of wrath, and the rough trumpet note, warlike and unsparing, which it sounds against the unfaithful herdsmen who are sped and the ‘grim wolf with privy paw,’ was to ring louder and louder through the prose works, and finally to clash in the ears of those very Presbyterians whom he now supported. There is then a steady progress of thought and of change in the poems. The Milton of Lycidas is not the Milton of Comus. The Milton of Comus is not the Milton of the Penseroso, less still of the Allegro. The Milton of the Penseroso is not the Milton of the Ode to the Nativity. Nothing of the Renaissance is left now but its learning and its art.”<sup>1</sup>

III. LIFE OF MILTON

The life and literary career of John Milton fall naturally into three periods. The first, which we may call the period of his education, extends to his return from the continent in 1639. In it he wrote the most important of his shorter poems. In the second, which ends in 1660, he wrote almost no poetry. He was for about ten years an officer of the English government; during the entire period he was busy writing arguments in prose, both Latin and English. From this fact it is often called his prose period. In the third, which ends at his death, in 1674, he wrote Paradise Lost, Paradise Regained, and Samson Agonistes.

(a) 1608–1639. — John Milton was born in London on the ninth of December, 1608. His father was John Milton, a scrivener, whose office and residence was in Bread Street at the sign of the Spread Eagle. A scrivener drew up deeds, contracts, and other documents of the same kind, and lent money on commission. The poet's grandfather had in the reign of Elizabeth been fined as a Roman Catholic recusant. The poet's father was disowned when he joined the Church of England. These facts help one to understand the keen interest which Milton always felt in religious questions. Milton, the scrivener, prospered in business, and the youth of the poet seems to have been unusually happy. The scrivener was a skilful musician, a composer of considerable reputation, and even tried his hand at poetry. Milton's Latin poem Ad Patrem is a tribute to his father's learning and generosity. It is only one of many proofs that the father had a wonderful influence on his gifted son. Of the mother little is known except that she was distinguished "by the esteem in which she was held and the alms which she bestowed." Milton's brother Richard studied law, turned Roman Catholic, and was knighted by James II. In spite of their different opinions in politics and religion, the brothers maintained the pleasantest of relations. Anne, Milton's only sister, became Mrs. Phillips, and by a second marriage Mrs. Agar. Her two sons by her first husband were taught by Milton after his return from the continent; one of them is numbered among his earliest biographers. The home of the Miltons, though Puritan, was not devoid of the ordinary pleasures. It had the culture of the Elizabethan home of the better class, with the best characteristics of Puritanism.

<sup>1</sup> Milton, by Stopford A. Brooke. Quoted by permission of D. Appleton and Company.

It helps one to an understanding of Milton's writings to remember that he was eight years old at the death of Shakespeare. He may even have seen the great dramatist on the street, for the famous Mermaid Tavern frequented by Shakespeare and his friends was on Bread Street. Milton was seventeen at the death of Bacon, twenty-seven at the death of Ben Jonson. The great poet of Puritanism lived, therefore, before the Elizabethan spirit had waned; he was touched by the intensity and largeness of life in the Elizabethan era. L'Allegro is evidence of that.

His father provided liberally for his education; and the boy proved himself worthy of his father's liberality. "My appetite for knowledge was," he says, "so voracious, that, from twelve years of age, I hardly ever left my studies, or went to bed before midnight." Thus began the injury to his eyes which resulted in his blindness. He studied first under a Presbyterian clergyman, Thomas Young, whom he always respected and admired, and later in St. Paul's School under Alexander Gill. He read the Latin and Greek authors necessary for entrance to the university, and ranged at will through the English writers. His critics have detected in his works the influence of Chaucer, Spenser, Drayton, Drummond of Hawthornden, Tasso in Fairfax's translation, and Sylvester in the translation of Du Bartas.

Two influences in Milton's life at St. Paul's School are deserving of mention. Here began his friendship with the half-Italian Charles Diodati, which continued unabated till the untimely death of Diodati in 1638. Milton's other close friend in the school was Alexander Gill the younger, who held the position of usher. Something of a poet himself, he had considerable influence on the literary efforts of his pupil.

Milton entered Christ's College, Cambridge University, in 1625, received the B.A. degree in 1629, and the M.A. in 1632. He thus spent seven years in the University. His life there was not particularly happy. Soon after his entrance a disagreement with his tutor Chappell led to his enforced absence from college. As on his return he was assigned to a different tutor and did not lose credit for a term's work, we may assume that the fault was not entirely his. Of the university Milton was severely critical. Later in his life he spoke of himself as never greatly admiring it. But his diligence and brilliance as a student won for him the approbation of the authorities. He acknowledged "publicly, with all grateful mind, that more than ordinary favor and respect, which I found above any of my equals at the hands of those courteous and learned men, the fellows of that college wherein I spent seven years: who, at my parting, after I had taken two degrees . . . signified many ways how much better it would content them that I would stay."

When Milton left the university, he was still undecided as to his life work. His father had expected him to become a clergyman of the Church of England. This, however, had become impossible for him. His reason for not entering the Church he stated fully. To the service of the Church "by the intentions of my parents and friends, I was destined of a child, and in mine own resolutions: till coming to some maturity of years, and perceiving what tyranny had invaded the church, that he who would take orders must subscribe himself slave, and take an oath withal, which, unless he took with a conscience that would retch, he must either straight perjure, or split his faith; I thought it better to prefer a blameless silence before the sacred office of speaking, bought and begun with servitude and forswearing." Thus he was "church-outed by the prelates," that is, by Laud and his followers.

Before Milton left college, his father had retired from business and moved to Horton in Buckinghamshire. This region, according to Professor Masson, "is a rich, teeming, verduous flat, charming by its appearance of plenty, and by the goodly show of wood along the fields and pastures, in the nooks where the houses nestle, and everywhere in all directions to the sky-bound verge of the landscape. . . . There are elms, alders, poplars, and cedars; there is no lack of shrubbery and hedging; and in the spring the orchards are abloom with white and pink for miles around." It was an ideal spot for the writing of L'Allegro and Il Penseroso. In Horton the young poet lived five years; he "spent a complete holiday in reading over the Greek and Latin writers." Occasionally he went to London to buy books and to take lessons in mathematics or in music, subjects in which his interest was keen.

In the university Milton wrote, besides letters and college exercises in Latin and in English, several poems which gave promise of greater work to come. Of these On the Morning of Christ's Nativity, an ode in thirty-one stanzas, is the most noteworthy. Others that should be mentioned are At a Solemn Musick, and On his Having Arrived at the Age of Twenty-three. The latter, because it possesses peculiar biographical interest, ought to be quoted. It was written just before Milton received the M.A. degree.

"How soon hath Time, the subtle thief of youth, Stolen on his wing my three and twentieth year!
My hasting days fly on with full career,
But my late spring no bud or blossom shew'th.
Perhaps my semblance might deceive the truth,
That I to manhood am arrived so near,
And inward ripeness doth much less appear,
That some more timely-happy spirits indu'th.

Yet be it less or more, or soon or slow,
It shall be still in strictest measure even
To that same lot, however mean or high,
Towards which Time leads me, and the will of Heaven.
All is, if I have grace to use it so,
As ever in my great Task-master's eye."

This sonnet, after Milton had settled in Horton, he inserted in a letter to a friend, who evidently had written to him a criticism of the seeming aimlessness of his life. As it was written some time before, it showed that the young man had already given thought to the subject. The last six lines show Milton's supreme confidence in himself, and his determination not to pluck his laurels untimely. In Horton between 1632 and 1638 he wrote, among other poems, To the Nightingale, L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, Arcades, Comus, and Lycidas. This is a small body of work for five years, but no one considering its quality can call those years unproductive.

About the first of May, 1638, with a man-servant Milton left England to travel on the continent. In Paris he received distinguished attentions from Lord Scudamore, the English Ambassador, and by him was introduced to "that most learned man, Hugo Grotius, who was the Ambassador from the Queen of Sweden to the French King." Through Nice, Genoa, Leghorn, and Pisa Milton travelled to Florence. In that city he remained two months. Apparently he had good letters of introduction, for in the Florentine Academies, or literary clubs, he made the acquaintance of "the noble and learned of the city." While there he visited Galileo, but recently freed from imprisonment at Arcetri — imprisonment due to "thinking in Astronomy otherwise than the Franciscan and Dominican licensers thought." Thus met the two famous blind men of the seventeenth century, for in thirteen years Milton was himself to be totally blind. That the visit impressed him deeply is proved by the fact that twenty years later in writing Paradise Lost he mentioned Galileo twice, once by name. In the fifth book Raphael from the gate of Heaven sees the earth,

"As when by night the glass
Of Galileo, less assured, observes
Imagined lands and regions in the Moon."

In October Milton went to Rome. Here he attended a magnificent concert given by Cardinal Barberini. At this concert he heard the famous singer, Leonora Baroni, in whose honor he wrote three Latin epigrams. He had intended to extend his trip to Sicily and Greece; but in Naples he received news of Charles's troubles with the Scots and of the likelihood of civil war; and decided to return to England. "While I was desirous," he writes, "to cross into Sicily and Greece, the sad news of Civil War in England called me back; for I considered it base that, while my fellow-countrymen were fighting at home for liberty, I should be travelling abroad at ease for intellectual culture." Apparently he soon discovered that the tidings were exaggerated. He spent a second two months in Rome, though he had been warned of danger from the Jesuits because of his great freedom in discussing religious questions. "I had made these resolutions with myself," he says, "not of my own accord to introduce conversation about religion; but, if interrogated respecting the faith, whatsoever I should suffer, to dissemble nothing." In Florence he again spent two months, and received a warm welcome from his friends. Thence he proceeded to Paris by way of Venice, Verona, Milan, and Geneva. About the first of August he was back in England. While on the continent he wrote only in Italian and Latin. His poems in these languages received enthusiastic praise from the distinguished Italians with whom he associated.

(b) 1639-1660. — Soon after his return to England Milton wrote Epitaphium Damonis, a Latin elegy on the death of his schoolmate and best of friends, Charles Diodati. His grief was more intimate and personal than that he felt in writing Lycidas. Hence as an expression of grief the Latin elegy is superior to the English. Biographically, too, the Epitaphium Damonis is interesting because in it Milton tells of his plan for writing a great poem. This idea never left his mind. In Italy he had told of his intention "to leave something behind him so written to after times as that they should not willingly let it die." In 1639 he was planning to choose as his theme the early kings of Britain. He announced also in the Epitaphium Damonis his intention of writing henceforth in English only.

At this time the King's war with the Scots, known as the First Bishops' War, had just ended. England was thrilling with political unrest. But Milton, the household at Horton having been broken up, took lodgings in London and began preparations for his great poem. At this time he became the instructor of his two nephews, Edward and John Phillips. Later he taught also some few sons of friends. But in spite of Dr. Johnson's vigorous assertion, we must conclude that he was never really a schoolmaster.

From his notebooks kept at this time we learn that he was busily engaged on his projected great poem. He made a list of a hundred subjects, and selected from among them finally the Fall of Satan. There is, in fact, evidence that as early as 1642 he began a poem on this subject. But for about twenty years he was to write scarcely any poetry. A petition against Episcopacy was presented to Parliament by the Puritans. A perfect storm of pamphlets followed it. Milton wrote five pamphlets against Episcopacy, the last published, we believe, in March, 1642.

In 1643 he left London without telling his friends anything about his plans. "About Whitsuntide it was, or a little after," writes Phillips, "that he took a journey into the country, nobody about him certainly knowing the reason, or that it was any more than a journey of recreation; but home he returns a married man that went out a bachelor, his wife being Mary, the eldest daughter of Mr. Richard Powell, then a Justice of the Peace, of Forest-hill, near Shotover, in Oxfordshire." Of Milton's courtship nothing is known. In 1627 Richard Powell acknowledged a debt to John Milton senior of £500. The poet may first have visited the Powell home on business connected with the debt; and this may have led to his meeting his bride-to-be. It was a most unfortunate match. Milton was in the middle of his thirty-fifth year; his wife of her eighteenth. He was a Puritan; she a Royalist. They had no interests in common. Their honeymoon must have been extremely unhappy. At the end of a month Mrs. Milton returned to her family, leaving with her husband the impression that she would come back to him at Michaelmas, that is, in about two months. When the time came, she refused to return. The result was the publication by Milton of his famous Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce in which he maintained that incompatibility of temperament is the strongest reason for divorce. Just when this pamphlet was written and published we do not know. Professor Masson found evidence to prove that the date of its publication is August first, which is about the time Mary Milton left for Oxfordshire. If it was published then, Milton must have written it during the first month of his married life. But if he wrote it then and published it, he acted very inconsistently in asking her to return at the time she had promised. In spite of documentary evidence to the contrary, it seems most likely that Mary Milton's refusal to return was the occasion for the writing and publication of the pamphlet. Three more pamphlets on the same subject followed it.

Two years later, when the Parliamentary army had overrun Oxfordshire, and the Royalist cause seemed hopeless, the wife returned to her husband and was forgiven.

Liberty is the watchword of all Milton's pamphlets. While advocating liberty of divorce, he wrote on two other subjects connected with liberty. He addressed to his friend, Samuel Hartlib, a German busy with many kinds of projects, a Tract on Education, in which he set forth his views of an improved system of education for gentlemen's sons. Following this tract came Areopagitica, or Speech for the Liberty of Unlicensed Printing. It urged the Parliament to repeal an order regulating the press by official censors. This is Milton's best piece of prose writing. His other prose works are read now, if they are read at all, because they were written by Milton. The Areopagitica is still read because of its intrinsic merit. The argument is convincing, and the style unsurpassed for vigor, richness, and eloquence.

Between 1649 and 1660 Milton wrote many pamphlets, justifying the trial and execution of Charles I., defending the Commonwealth and Protectorate, and trying to prevent the return of the Stuarts. In 1649, in the Tenure of Kings and Magistrates, he defended the thesis that the people have the right to depose a tyrannous king or other magistrate. In Eikonoklastes he ridiculed the Eikon Basilike, a book supposed at the time to contain the prayers and meditations of Charles written by him during the latter part of his captivity. It is now thought to be the work of Dr. John Gauden. The most important of the other pamphlets are the Defensio pro Populo Anglicano (Defence of the English People) and Defensio Secunda (Second Defence). The first, which was a reply to a vindication of Charles by a famous Leyden professor, Claude de Saumaise — Salmasius — gained Milton a reputation throughout educated Europe. It was while he was working on this pamphlet that his blindness became complete.

Soon after the death of Charles, Milton was appointed Latin Secretary to the Commonwealth, the name by which England was known during the three years that it was in form a republic. His duty was to conduct in Latin the correspondence of his government with foreign nations and to be its literary defender. This office he held under the Protectorate, when Cromwell became practically a monarch, and during the few months that Richard Cromwell nominally succeeded his father. At the Restoration of the Stuarts in 1660 Milton had to hide himself in London. Probably because of a combination in his favor in Parliament he escaped with nothing more serious than being arrested and having to pay fees of about £500 to the officers concerned in the arrest.

His wife died in 1652, leaving three small daughters. A son had died some time before. Milton's relations with his daughters were never pleasant; and for the unpleasant relations most of his biographers have blamed him — altogether too much. There was fault on both sides. His daughters were like their mother; and she had not either the disposition or the training that would fit her for a happy life with Milton. An attempt to fix the blame for the unhappiness caused by the marriage of Mary Powell and John Milton is futile.

In 1656 Milton took as his second wife Katherine Woodcock, who died about fifteen months after the marriage, followed to the grave in a month by their infant daughter. The sonnet On his Deceased Wife indicates that this marriage proved most happy.

(c) 1660–1674. — Immediately after the Restoration we must think of Milton as old, blind, reduced in fortune, and disgraced. But his courage never failed him. Before that time there is reason to believe that he had written two books of Paradise Lost. By 1665 he had completed it. It might have been published the next year, had not the great fire in London crippled the publishers. In 1667 the first edition was offered for sale. In less than two years thirteen hundred copies were sold. For the seventeenth century this was a large sale. The reception which the poem received warranted Edward Phillips, Milton's nephew, in writing that many not unqualified to judge pronounced it the perfection of its kind of poetry. About the same time Dryden is reported to have said of Milton: "This man cuts us all out and the ancients too." Paradise Lost, its author had the pleasure of knowing before his death, was raising him to "the highest heaven of fame."

In 1671 he had completed Paradise Regained and Samson Agonistes. In the next three years he prepared for the press a number of prose works, among them a miniature Latin grammar, a digest of the logic of Ramus, and a History of Britain — a romantic narrative of transactions down to the Norman Conquest.

He married in 1663 Elizabeth Minshull, who long survived him. This marriage, though it was in a high degree unromantic, — the third Mrs. Milton came on the recommendation of her cousin, Milton's physician, — seems to have been happy. We have plenty of evidence of the blind poet's appreciation of his wife's efforts to make him comfortable.

Milton died on the eighth of November, 1674. "All his learned and great friends in London, not without a concourse of the vulgar," writes Toland, "accompanied his body to the church of St. Giles, near Cripplegate, where he was buried in the chancel."

IV. L'ALLEGRO AND IL PENSEROSO

L'Allegro and Il Penseroso, published in 1645, and probably written at Horton in 1632, were the first poems, Professor Masson thinks, to be composed by Milton after he left the university. They are companion studies, "dedicated to two conditions of mind" — mirthfulness, or joyousness, and pensiveness. Or if the reader prefers he may call them dedicated to the joyous man and the pensive man respectively; or, again, a contrast between the pleasures of a worldly life and those of a studious. In the very plan Milton shows his genius. Before him poets had contrasted the two moods; he saw the possibilities of a contrast in companion poems. The balanced structure is apparent throughout. They are in a sense an elaborate antithesis. The first line of each is a command to depart; then in each comes a genealogy invented by the poet, which is followed by an invocation of the Goddess whose presence is desired. Then throughout with L'Allegro's pleasures those of Il Penseroso stand in sharp contrast. And always the surroundings and habits harmonize with the mood. The sweetness and quietness of the description is delightful. One may ignore those of Milton's critics who are troubled by inaccuracy in this description. He may not have his facts so nearly right as Wordsworth has his, but he is always true to the spirit of the scene. Most readers will agree with Macaulay that L'Allegro and Il Penseroso are not so much poems as collections of hints, from each one of which a person is to make a poem for himself. It need not be supposed that in either poem all the pleasures are crowded into one day.

Milton may have taken from various sources ideas used in these poems. In this connection critics always mention The Author's Abstract of Melancholy from the preface of Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy. It can have furnished no more than a hint, though the line,

“Nought so sweet as melancholy,” reminds one of Il Penseroso's

“Hail, divinest Melancholy.”

In a song in Beaumont and Fletcher's Nice Valour occurs the line,

“Hence, all you vain delights,” which again makes the reader think of a line in Il Penseroso:

“Hence, vain, deluding Joys.”

Professor Neilson has called attention to another possible source in John Marston's Scourge of Villainy, Satire XI, a part of which he finds similar both in thought and phrasing to the first lines in L'Allegro.

In metre Milton's two poems are similar. The body of each is composed of lines of eight syllables, riming in pairs, and with the accent on the even-numbered syllables. But frequently the initial unaccented syllable is missing. The introductory ten lines of each are of six and ten syllables alternately. The rime scheme of these lines is abbaeddeec.

V. ARCADES

Arcades was “part of an entertainment presented to the Countess Dowager of Derby by some noble persons of her family." She is the lady to whom, as Lady Strange, Spenser dedicated his Teares of the Muses. Her maiden name was Alice Spenser, and Edmund Spenser was her relative. Her husband, Ferdinando, Lord Strange, became Earl of Derby. She is thought to be the Amaryllis of Spenser's pastoral poem, Colin Clouts Come Home Again, and her husband the Amyntas whose death is mourned : —

"Amyntas quite is gone and lies full low,
Having his Amaryllis left to mone.
Helpe, O ye shepherds, helpe ye all in this,
Helpe Amaryllis this her losse to mourne :
Her losse is yours, your losse Amyntas is,
Amyntas, floure of shepherds pride forlorne
He whilest he lived was the noblest swaine,
That ever piped in an oaten quill."

In 1600 the widow became the wife of the Lord Keeper Egerton, but she continued throughout her life to be known as the Countess of Derby. Her second husband in 1616, shortly before his death, was created Viscount Brackley. His son by a former marriage, John Egerton, became Earl of Bridgewater, an honor intended for the father and given to the son immediately as an indication of great respect for his father's memory. To the Countess of Derby the Earl of Bridgewater was doubly related in that he had married about 1600 her daughter by her first marriage. The children of the Earl were thus the grandchildren and the step-grandchildren of the Countess of Derby. Professor Masson suggests that they and others of her descendants decided to "present the aged countess with a Masque."

Viscount Brackley and his brother, Mr. Thomas Egerton, sons of the Earl of Bridgewater, had acted in Carew's Cælum Britannicum, presented at court a short time before. The music of that masque was by Henry Lawes, who was the instructor in music of the Bridgewater children. It was probably through Lawes that Milton was engaged to write the poetry. Milton may have studied music under Lawes, or the latter may have been associated with Milton's father, who was a musician of reputation.

VI. COMUS

Comus was prepared for the same family as Arcades. In 1631 Charles I. appointed the Earl of Bridgewater Lord President of Wales. This presidency included besides Wales the four western counties of England; and the official seat of the Lord President was Ludlow in Shropshire. The Earl did not begin his duties immediately, but by the fall of 1634 he and his family had arrived in Ludlow. The celebration of his inauguration extended over the greater part of that year. Probably the younger members of the family urged the presentation of a masque. Lawes was appointed general manager and musician. Milton was engaged to furnish the literary part. And Comus was acted on the twenty-ninth of September in 1634. The Earl's daughter, the Lady Alice, then in her fifteenth year, took the part of the Lady. Lord Brackley and Mr. Thomas Egerton, her younger brothers, took the parts of the two brothers. Lawes acted the part of the attendant spirit and of Thyrsis.

The dialogue of Comus is written in blank verse lines of ten syllables, with the accent on the even-numbered syllables. An occasional line with an extra syllable furnishes variety. Eighteen lines (495-512) are in rimed couplets. Lines 93 to 144 and 902 to 1023 are in the same metre as the main portions of L'Allegro and Il Penseroso.

The lines of the songs are of various lengths and rimes.

“Critics have pointed out that in writing Comus Milton must have had analogous pieces by some previous writers before him. They specify more particularly The Old Wive’s Tale of the dramatist Peele (1595), Fletcher’s pastoral of the Faithful Shepherdess, which had been revived in 1633–1634, Ben Jonson’s masque of Pleasure Reconciled to Virtue (1619), in which Comus or the God of Good Cheer is one of the characters, and a Latin extravaganza in prose and verse, entitled Comus, by the Dutchman Erycius Puteanus alias Hendrik van der Putten, originally published at Louvain in 1608, and republished at Oxford in 1634.”<sup>1</sup> The character Circe appears in the Inner Temple Masque by William Browne (1614), in the company of nymphs and sirens; and in the antimasque the dancers are men who have assumed the shape of beasts. This masque probably influenced Milton. “Coincidences are undoubtedly discernible between Comus and these compositions, especially the Latin extravaganza of the Dutch author. Infinitely too much has been made, however, of such coincidences. After any or all of the pieces named, or any others that can be named, the feeling in reading Milton's Masque is that it is all his own, and his own only, a thing absolutely and essentially Miltonic, without precedent or approach to precedent in English or in any other language. The peculiarity consists no less in the power and purity of the doctrine than in the exquisite mythological invention and the perfection of the literary finish."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Masson, Life of Milton, Vol. I, p. 622.

VII. THE MASQUE

Arcades and Comus are masques, a kind of entertainment which attained its final form in the seventeenth century in the hands of musicians like Lawes, architects like Inigo Jones, and dramatists like Ben Jonson. But entertainments similar to the masque had been known in England from very early times. They were called mummings, disguisings, and masques. Their nature is illustrated by a description of a celebration called a mumming, held in honor of Richard II. at his accession to the throne in 1377. The name mumming carries the idea that the masked performers said nothing to indicate who they were. The entertainment would now be called a masquerade. When, however, the emphasis was on the costume rather than on silence, the same disguising prevailed. By the seventeenth century masque had supplanted the other names for the form, and masques had become exceedingly popular. The mumming in 1377 ended with a dance, the mummers on one side and the King and Lords on the other. And here we have the important feature of every masque, — a group of masked dancers. The stage machinery, which under Inigo Jones became most ingenious and elaborate, the songs, the dialogue, are all the setting for a ball. It is plain that Comus is not a typical masque. The dancing in Ben Jonson's Masque of Queens must have continued, to judge from Ben's own account of it, fully two hours.

<sup>1</sup> Idem.

A study of the Masque of Queens will reveal the main characteristics of the type. This masque was prepared by Jonson at the request of Queen Anne, and presented at Whitehall in February, 1609. Jonson himself has left a complete description of it. It begins with an antimasque, "twelve women, in the habit of hags, . . . not as a masque, but a spectacle of strangeness." . . . While the hags were dancing, "on the sudden was heard a sound of loud music, as if many instruments had made one blast; with which not only the hags themselves, but the hell into which they ran, quite vanished, and . . . in the place of it appeared a glorious and magnificent building . . . in the top of which were discovered the twelve Masquers, sitting upon a throne triumphal . . . circled with all store of light. From whom a person by this time descended, in the furniture of Perseus, and expressing heroic and masculine Virtue began to speak." He explained the situation and introduced the masquers, who were disguised as "Penthesilia, the brave Amazon," "Swift-foot Camilla," and other queens of the ancient world. The twelfth and last was Bel-anna in obvious compliment to Queen Anne, who acted the part.

Perseus concluded with a compliment to King James.

"Lo you, that cherish every great example
Contracted in yourself; and being so ample

A field of honor, cannot but embrace
A spectacle, so full of love, and grace
Unto your court : where every princely dame
Contentds to be as bounteous of her fame
To others, as her life was good to her.
For by their lives they only did confer
Good to themselves ; but, by their fame, to yours,
And every age, the benefit endures."

At the end of this speech "the throne wherein they sat . . . suddenly changed; and in place of it appeared Fama bona . . . attired in white, with white wings, having a collar of gold about her neck. . . ." After a short speech by Fame, the dancing began.

We can gather from these incomplete quotations from Ben Jonson some idea of the principal characteristics of the masque. Like the Masque of Queens all masques were written by request for particular occasions such as weddings, inaugurations, or coronations. Naturally they contain many compliments. Again masques are of the nature of private theatricals, being unadapted to the theatre and never presented there. The actors were always nobles, or at least of high rank. But professional actors often performed in the antimasque, where greater skill was required than in the masque proper.

The antimasque as adapted by Ben Jonson supplied contrast and thus tended to make the entertainment dramatic. The characters might be allegorical, mythological, or historical. For a wedding masque they would be Juno, Venus, Hymen, and other powers that might be expected to favor the married; or instead they might be Laughter, Love, Harmony, and Delight. Writers of masques ransacked all ancient history and mythology for subjects. They delighted especially in classical characters and in personified abstractions such as Fame, Beauty, and Reason.

Two elements of the masque have not yet been mentioned. The characters are often disguised as shepherds and shepherdesses, but the masque is not a division of pastoral poetry as some writers suppose. The popularity of the pastoral idea caused it to appear in many literary forms besides the masque. for example, in the dramas of Shakespeare. Secondly, didacticism in the masque had, before Milton wrote Comus, received the approval of Ben Jonson's example, but the Puritanism of Milton manifests itself in his making the didactic purpose of the masque its central idea.

VIII. LYCIDAS

Lycidas was written in the fall of 1637, probably in November, in memory of Edward King, a member of Christ's College, Cambridge. He had entered that college in 1626 and had received a fellowship in 1630. Milton had entered in 1625. It has been believed that had the fellowship been awarded strictly for merit Milton would have received it. We do not know much about the relations which existed in college between the two men. Some critics have assumed that they were bosom friends, but all we really know is that they were in college together, that without any question they were acquainted, and that probably Milton, like all the other members of Christ's, respected King. We have no reason to think that Milton regarded King with any such warm feelings of friendship as he did Charles Diodati. King, who was intending to become a clergyman of the Church of England, held various offices in the University. In August of his eleventh year in Cambridge he took ship at Chester to cross to Dublin, to visit his relatives. His father, Sir John King, held high office in Ireland. Not far from the English coast the vessel sank, and most of the passengers, including King, were drowned.

On the opening of the University in October King's friends planned to publish a volume of verses in his memory. The volume appeared in January, 1638. It consisted of two parts; the first contained three Greek poems and twenty Latin; the second thirteen English poems. Lycidas, which was the last poem in the book, and by far the most noteworthy, was signed by the poet's initials only, J. M.

Lycidas is a pastoral elegy. An elegy is a song or lyric poem expressing grief. Similar elegies are Shelley's Adonais and Matthew Arnold's Thyrsis. To understand pastoral poetry such as Lycidas one must turn back to the writings of Theocritus, born about 300 B.C., in Syracuse, a Greek colony in Sicily. He was a realist in the sense that he watched the shepherds at their work and at their games, listened to their songs, and then depicted them in his poetry, idealized, we believe, but still true to life.

Mr. Andrew Lang thus summarizes Idyl I. of Theocritus: "The shepherd Thyrsis meets a goat-herd, in a shady place beside a spring, and at his invitation sings the Song of Daphnis. This ideal hero of Greek pastoral song had won for his bride the fairest of the Nymphs. Confident in the strength of his passion, he boasted that Love could never subdue him to a new affection. Love avenged himself by making Daphnis desire a strange maiden, but to this temptation he never yielded, and so died a constant lover. The song tells how the cattle and the wild things of the wood bewailed him, how Hermes and Priapus gave him counsel in vain, and how with his last breath he retorted the taunts of the implacable Aphrodite."

The song of Daphnis furnished a model a few years later for Moschus in his Lament for Bion. Moschus and Bion lived and wrote in Sicily a little later than Theocritus. In his lament Moschus chose to use the machinery of the Song of Daphnis. That is, he represented himself as a shepherd mourning the death of another shepherd, his friend. Thus pastoral poetry moved one step away from the real. In the Eclogues Virgil imitated Theocritus; he made no effort to depict the shepherd life of his own time and country. His Eclogues are invariably allegories. In fact, allegory finally was believed to be essential to pastoral poetry, and the departure from realism was complete.

With the Renaissance came throughout Europe a quickened interest in the classics. Italian poets such as Sannazaro and Guarini imitated Virgil and helped to give vogue to the artificial pastoral. These influenced English writers before Milton. The pastoral idea was not confined to the elegy, but was used in prose romances and in the drama. Spenser used it in the Shepherd's Calendar, twelve eclogues, one for each month in the year; Sir Philip Sidney in the Arcadia, and John Fletcher in The Faithful Shepherdess. Long before he wrote Lycidas, Milton used the form in Arcades and partly in Comus.

Lycidas is written in lines of ten syllables with the accent on the even numbered syllables. Fourteen lines have but six syllables and three accents each. They are 4, 19, 21, 33, 41, 43, 48, 56, 79, 88, 90, 95, 108, and 145. The rime is irregular, sometimes it affects two lines; sometimes three or more; once six. Occasional blank verse lines produce further variety. Examples of them are 1, 22, 39. "The poem is an exquisite example of a kind of verse which theorists might pronounce the most perfect and natural of any — that in which the mechanism is elastic, or determined from moment to moment by the swell or shrinking of the meaning or feeling.”

MATTHEW ARNOLD'S ADDRESS ON MILTON <sup>1</sup>

THE most eloquent voice of our century uttered shortly before leaving the world a warning cry "against the Anglo-Saxon contagion." The tendencies and aims, the view of life and the social economy of the ever-multiplying and spreading Anglo-Saxon race, would be found congenial, this prophet feared, by all the prose, all the vulgarity amongst mankind, and would invade and overpower all nations. The true ideal would be lost, a general sterility of mind and heart would set in.

The prophet had in view, no doubt, in the warning thus given, us and our colonies, but the United States still more. There the Anglo-Saxon race is already most numerous, there it increases fastest; there material interests are most absorbing and pursued with most energy; there the ideal, the saving ideal, of a high and rare excellence, seems perhaps to suffer most danger of being obscured and lost. Whatever one may think of the general danger to the world from the Anglo-Saxon contagion, it appears to me difficult to deny that the growing greatness and influence of the United States does bring with it some danger to the ideal of a high and rare excellence. The average man is too much a religion there; his performance is unduly magnified, his shortcomings are not duly seen and admitted. A lady in the State of Ohio sent to me only the other day a volume on American authors; the praise given throughout was of such high pitch that in thanking her I could not forbear saying that for only one or two of the authors named was such a strain of praise admissible, and that we lost all real standard of excellence by praising so uniformly and immoderately. She answered me with charming good temper, that very likely I was quite right, but it was pleasant to her to think that excellence was common and abundant. But excellence is not common and abundant; on the contrary, as the Greek poet long ago said, excellence dwells among rocks hardly accessible, and a man must almost wear his heart out before he can reach her. Whoever talks of excellence as common and abundant is on the way to lose all right standard of excellence. And when the right standard of excellence is lost, it is not likely that much which is excellent will be produced.

<sup>1</sup> An address delivered by Matthew Arnold in St. Margaret's Church, Westminster, on the 13th of February, 1888, at the unveiling of a memorial window presented by Mr. George W. Childs of Philadelphia.

To habituate ourselves, therefore, to approve, as the Bible says, things that are really excellent, is of the highest importance. And some apprehension may justly be caused by a tendency in Americans to take, or at any rate, attempt to take, profess to take, the average man and his performances too seriously, to overrate and overpraise what is not really superior.

But we have met here to-day to witness the unveiling of a gift in Milton's honor, and a gift bestowed by an American, Mr. Childs of Philadelphia; whose cordial hospitality so many Englishmen, I myself among the number, have experienced in America. It was only last autumn that Stratford-upon-Avon celebrated the reception of a gift from the same generous donor in honor of Shakespeare. Shakespeare and Milton — he who wishes to keep his standard of excellence high, cannot choose two better objects of regard and honor. And it is an American who has chosen them, and whose beautiful gift in honor of one of them, Milton, with Mr. Whittier's simple and true lines inscribed upon it, is unveiled to-day. Perhaps this gift in honor of Milton, of which I am asked to speak, is, even more than the gift in honor of Shakespeare, one to suggest edifying reflections to us.

Like Mr. Whittier, I treat the gift of Mr. Childs as a gift in honor of Milton, although the window given is in memory of his second wife, Catherine Woodcock, the "late espoused saint" of the famous sonnet, who died in childbed at the end of the first year of her marriage with Milton, and who lies buried here with her infant. Milton is buried in Cripple-gate, but he lived for a good while in this parish of St. Margaret's, Westminster, and here he composed part of Paradise Lost, and the whole of Paradise Regained and Samson Agonistes. When death deprived him of the Catherine whom the new window commemorates, Milton had still some eighteen years to live, and Cromwell, his "chief of men," was yet ruling England. But the Restoration, with its "Sons of Belial," was not far off; and in the meantime Milton's heavy affliction had laid fast hold upon him; his eyesight had failed totally, he was blind. In what remained to him of life he had the consolation of producing the Paradise Lost and the Samson Agonistes, and such a consolation we may indeed count as no slight one. But the daily life of happiness in common things and in domestic affections — a life of which, to Milton, as to Dante, too small a share was given — he seemed to have known most, if not only, in his one married year with the wife who is here buried. Her form “vested all in white,” as in his sonnet he relates that after her death she appeared to him, her face veiled, but with “love, sweetness, and goodness” shining in her person, — this fair and gentle daughter of the rigid sectarist of Hackney, this lovable companion with whom Milton had rest and happiness one year, is a part of Milton indeed, and in calling up her memory, we call up his.

And in calling up Milton’s memory we call up, let me say, a memory upon which, in prospect of the Anglo-Saxon contagion and of its dangers, supposed and real, it may be well to lay stress even more than upon Shakespeare’s. If to our English race an inadequate sense of perfection of work is a real danger, if the discipline of respect for a high and flawless excellence is peculiarly needed by us, Milton is of all our gifted men the best lesson, the most salutary influence. In the sure and flawless perfection of his rhythm and diction he is as admirable as Virgil or Dante, and in this respect he is unique among us. No one else in English literature and art possesses the like distinction.

Thomson, Cowper, Wordsworth, — all of them good poets who have studied Milton, followed Milton, adopted his form, — fail in their diction and rhythm if we try them by that high standard of excellence maintained by Milton constantly. From style really high and pure Milton never departs : their departures from it are frequent.

Shakespeare is divinely strong, rich, and attractive. But sureness of perfect style Shakespeare himself does not possess. I have heard a politician express wonder at the treasures of political wisdom in a certain celebrated scene of Troilus and Cressida ; for my part I am at least equally moved to wonder at the fantastic and false diction in which Shakespeare has in that scene clothed them. Milton, from one end of Paradise Lost to the other, is in his diction and rhythm constantly a great artist in the great style. Whatever may be said as to the subject of his poem, as to the conditions under which he received his subject and treated it, that praise, at any rate, is assured him.

For the rest, justice is not at present done, in my opinion, to Milton's management of the inevitable matter of a Puritan epic, a matter full of difficulties for a poet. Justice is not done to the architectonics, as Goethe would have called them, of Paradise Lost; in these, too, the power of Milton's art is remarkable. But this may be a proposition which requires discussion and development for establishing it, and they are impossible on an occasion like the present.

That Milton, of all our English race, is by his diction and rhythm the one artist of the highest rank in the great style whom we have; this I take as requiring no discussion, this I take as certain.

The mighty power of poetry and art is generally admitted. But where the soul of this power, of this power at its best, chiefly resides, very many of us fail to see. It resides chiefly in the refining and elevation wrought in us by the high and rare excellence of the great style. We may feel the effect without being able to give ourselves clear account of its cause, but the thing is so. Now, no race needs the influences mentioned, the influences of refining and elevation, more than ours; and in poetry and art our grand source for them is Milton.

To what does he owe this supreme distinction? To nature first and foremost, to that bent of nature for inequality which to the worshippers of the average man is so unacceptable; to a gift, a divine favor. "The older one grows," says Goethe, "the more one prizes natural gifts, because by no possibility can they be procured and stuck on." Nature formed Milton to be a great poet. But what other poet has shown so sincere a sense of the grandeur of his vocation, and a moral effort so constant and sublime to make and keep himself worthy of it? The Milton of religious and political controversy, and perhaps of domestic life also, is not seldom disfigured by want of amenity, by acerbity. The Milton of poetry, on the other hand, is one of those great men "who are modest" — to quote a fine remark of Leopardi, — that gifted and stricken young Italian, who in his sense for poetic style is worthy to be named with Dante and Milton — "who are modest because they continually compare themselves, not with other men, but with that idea of the perfect which they have before their mind." The Milton of poetry is the man, in his own magnificent phrase, of "devout prayer to that Eternal Spirit that can enrich with all utterance and knowledge, and sends out his Seraphim with the hallowed fire of his altar, to touch and purify the lips of whom he pleases." And finally, the Milton of poetry is, in his own words again, the man "of industrious and select reading." Continually he lived in companionship with high and rare excellence, with the great Hebrew poets and prophets, with the great poets of Greece and Rome. The Hebrew compositions were not in verse, and can be not inadequately represented by the grand measured prose of our English Bible. The verse of the poets of Greece and Rome no translation can adequately reproduce. Prose cannot have the power of Verse; verse-translation may give whatever of charm is in the soul and talent of the translator himself, but never the specific charm of the verse and poet translated. In our race there are thousands of readers, presently there will be millions, who know not a word of Greek and Latin, and will never learn those languages. If this host of readers are ever to gain any sense of the power and charm of the great poets of antiquity, their way to gain it is not through translations of the ancients, but through the original poetry of Milton, who has the like power and charm, because he has the like great style.

Through Milton they may gain it, for, in conclusion, Milton is English; this master in the great style of the ancients is English. Virgil, whom Milton loved and honored, has at the end of the Æneid a noble passage, where Juno, seeing the defeat of Turnus and the Italians imminent, the victory of the Trojan invaders assured, entreats Jupiter that Italy may nevertheless survive and be herself still, may retain her own mind, manners, and language, and not adopt those of the conqueror.

“Sit Latium, sint Albani per secula reges!” Jupiter grants the prayer; he promises perpetuity and the future to Italy — Italy reënforced by whatever virtue the Trojan race has, but Italy, not Troy. This we may take as a sort of parable suiting ourselves. All the Anglo-Saxon contagion, all the flood of Anglo-Saxon commonness, beats vainly against the great style but cannot shake it, and has to accept its triumph. But it triumphs in Milton, in one of our own race, tongue, faith, and morals. Milton has made the great style no longer an exotic here ; he has made it an inmate amongst us, a leaven, and a power. Nevertheless he, and his hearers on both sides of the Atlantic, are English, and will remain English —

“Sermonem Ausonii patrium moresque tenebunt.”

The English race overspreads the world, and at the same time the ideal of an excellence the most high and the most rare abides a possession with it forever.

HUMPHREY MOSELEY'S PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION OF MILTON'S POEMS, 1645.

"THE STATIONER TO THE READER

"It is not any private respect of gain, Gentle Reader (for the slightest Pamphlet is nowadays more vendible than the works of learnedest men), but it is the love I have to our own Language, that hath made me delight to collect and set forth such Pieces, both in Prose and Verse, as may renew the wonted honor and esteem of our English tongue ; and it's the worth of these both English and Latin Poems, not the flourish of any prefixed encomions, that can invite thee to buy them — though these are not without the highest commendations and applause of the learnedest Academicks, both domestic and foreign, and, amongst those of our own country, the unparalleled attestation of that renowned Provost of Eton, SIR HENRY WOOTTON. I know not thy palate, how it relishes such dainties, nor how harmonious thy soul is : perhaps more trivial Airs may please thee better. But, howsoever thy opinion is spent upon these, that encouragement I have already received from the most ingenious men, in their clear and courteous entertainment of Mr. WALLER'S late choice Pieces, hath once more made me adventure into the world, presenting it with these evergreen and not to be blasted laurels. The Author's more peculiar excellency in these studies was too well known to conceal his Papers, or to keep me from attempting to solicit them from him. Let the event guide itself which way it will, I shall deserve of the age by bringing into the light as true a birth as the Muses have brought forth since our famous SPENSER wrote; whose Poems in these English ones are as rarely imitated as sweetly excelled. Reader, if thou art eagle-eyed to censure their worth, I am not fearful to expose them to thy exactest perusal.

“Thine to command,

“HUMPH. MOSELEY.”

MILTON'S COMUS, LYCIDAS, AND OTHER POEMS

AT A SOLEMN MUSIC<sup>o</sup>

BLEST pair of Sirens, pledges of Heaven's joy,
Sphere-born<sup>o</sup> harmonious sisters, Voice and Verse,
Wed your divine sounds, and mixed power employ,
Dead things with inbreathed sense able to pierce ;
And to our high-raised phantasy present 5
That undisturbèd song of pure consent,<sup>o</sup>
Aye sung before the sapphire-coloured throne<sup>o</sup>
To Him that sits thereon,
With saintly shout and solemn jubilee ;
Where the bright Seraphim in burning row 10
Their loud uplifted angel-trumpets blow,
And the Cherubic host in thousand quires
Touch their immortal harps of golden wires,
With those just Spirits that wear victorious palms,
Hymns devout and holy psalms 15

Singing everlastingly :

That we on Earth, with undiscording voice,
May rightly answer that melodious noise ;<sup>o</sup>
As once we did, till disproportioned sin<sup>o</sup>
Jarred against nature's chime,<sup>o</sup> and with harsh din 20
Broke the fair music that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whose love their motion swayed
In perfect diapason,<sup>o</sup> whilst they stood
In first obedience, and their state of good.
O, may we soon again renew that song, 25
And keep in tune with Heaven, till God ere long
To his celestial consort<sup>o</sup> us unite,
To live with Him, and sing in endless morn of light !

ON SHAKESPEARE° 1630

WHAT needs my Shakespeare for his honoured bones
The labour of an age in pilèd stones
Or that his hallowed reliques should be hid
Under a star-ypointing° pyramid?
Dear son of memory, great heir of fame, 5
What need'st thou such weak witness of thy name?
Thou in our wonder and astonishment
Hast built thyself a livelong° monument.
For whilst, to the shame of slow-endeavouring art,°
Thy easy numbers flow, and that each heart 10
Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued° book
Those Delphic° lines with deep impression took,
Then thou, our fancy of itself bereaving,
Dost make us marble with too much conceiving,°
And so sepúlchred in such pomp dost lie 15
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

L'ALLEGRO°

HENCE, loathed Melancholy,°
Of Cerberus° and blackest Midnight born
In Stygian° cave forlorn
'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy !
Find out some uncouth° cell, 5
Where brooding Darkness spreads his jealous° wings,
And the night-raven° sings ;
There, under ebon shades and low-browed rocks,
As ragged as thy locks,
In dark Cimmerian° desert ever dwell. 10
But come, thou Goddess fair and free,
In heaven yclept° Euphrosyne,°
And by men heart-easing Mirth ;
Whom lovely Venus, at a birth,
With two sister Graces more, 15
To ivy-crownèd Bacchus bore :
Or whether (as some sager° sing)
The frolic wind that breathes the spring,
Zephyr, with Aurora playing,

As he met her once a-Maying, 20
There, on beds of violets blue,
And fresh-blown roses washed in dew,<sup>o</sup>
Filled her with thee, a daughter fair,
So buxom,<sup>o</sup> blithe, and debonair.<sup>o</sup>
Haste thee, Nymph, and bring with thee 25
Jest, and youthful Jollity,
Quips<sup>o</sup> and Cranks<sup>o</sup> and wanton<sup>o</sup> Wiles,
Nods and Becks and wreathèd Smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's<sup>o</sup> cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek ; 30
Sport that wrinkled Care derides,
And Laughter holding both his sides.
Come, and trip it,<sup>o</sup> as you go,
On the light fantastic<sup>o</sup> toe ;
And in thy right hand lead with thee 35
The mountain-nymph, sweet Liberty ;
And, if I give thee honour due,
Mirth, admit me of thy crew,
To live with her,<sup>o</sup> and live with thee,
In unreprieved<sup>o</sup> pleasure free ; 40
To hear the lark begin his flight,
And, singing, startle the dull night,
From his watch-tower in the skies,

Till the dappled° dawn doth rise ;
 Then to come, in spite of sorrow,° 45
 And at my window bid good-morrow,
 Through the sweet-briar or the vine,
 Or the twisted eglantine ;° honey-suckle
 While the cock, with lively din, 2
 Scatters the rear of darkness thin: 50
 And to the stack, or the barn-door,
 Stoutly struts his dames before:
 Oft listening how the hounds and horn 3
 Cheerly rouse the slumbering morn,
 From the side of some hoar hill, 55
 Through the high wood echoing shrill ;
 Sometime walking, not unseen,° anotation
 By hedgerow elms, on hillocks green,
 Right against the eastern gate
 Where the great Sun begins his state,° march 60
 Robed in flames and amber light,
 The clouds in thousand liveries dight ;° arrayed
 While the ploughman, near at hand,
 Whistles o'er the furrowed land,
 And the milkmaid singeth blithe, 65
 And the mower whets his scythe,
 And every shepherd tells his tale° counts sheep

Under the hawthorn in the dale.
 Straight° mine eye hath caught new pleasures,
 Whilst the landskip° round it measures: 70
 Russet lawns,° and fallows grey,
 Where the nibbling flocks do stray ;
 Mountains on whose barren breast
 The labouring clouds do often rest ;
 Meadows trim, with daisies pied ;° coloured 75
 Shallow brooks, and rivers wide ;
 Towers and battlements it sees
 Bosomed° encompassed high in tufted trees,
 Where perhaps some beauty lies,
 The cynosure° of neighbouring eyes. 80
 Hard by a cottage chimney smokes
 From betwixt two aged oaks, type of the old man
 Where Corydon° and Thyrsis° met
 Are at their savoury dinner set
 Of herbs and other country messes, 85
 Which the neat-handed Phillis° dresses ;
 And then in haste her bower she leaves,
 With Thestylis° to bind the sheaves ;
 Or, if the earlier season lead,
 To the tanned haycock in the mead. 90
 Sometimes, with secure° delight,

The upland° hamlets will invite,
When the merry bells ring round,
And jocund rebecks° sound
To many a youth and many a maid 95
Dancing in the chequered shade,°
And young and old come forth to play
On a sunshine holiday,
Till the livelong daylight fail:
Then to the spicy nut-brown ale,° 100
With stories told of many a feat,
How Faery Mab° the junkets° eat°
She° was pinched and pulled, she said ;
And he,° by Friar's lantern led,
Tells° how the drudging goblin sweat 105
To earn his cream-bowl duly set,
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath threshed the corn
That ten day-labourers could not end ;
Then lies him down, the lubber fiend, 110
And, stretched out all the chimney's° length,
Basks at the fire his hairy strength,
And crop°-full out of doors he flings,
Ere the first cock his matin rings.
Thus done the tales, to bed they creep, 115

By whispering winds soon lulled asleep.
 Towered cities° please us then, cities
 And the busy hum of men,
 Where throngs of knights and barons bold,
 In weeds° of peace, high triumphs° hold, 120
 With store of° ladies, whose bright eyes
 Rain influence,° and judge the prize°
 Of wit or arms, while both contend
 To win her° grace whom all commend.
 There let Hymen° oft appear 125
 In saffron° robe, with taper clear,
 And pomp, and feast, and revelry,
 With mask and antique pageantry ;
 Such sights as youthful poets dream
 On summer eves by haunted stream. 130
 Then to the well-trod stage anon
 If Jonson's learned sock° be on, comparison with Shakespeare
 Or sweetest Shakespeare, Fancy's child,
 Warble his native wood-notes wild,°
 And ever, against eating cares, 135
 Lap me in soft Lydian airs,° music
 Married to immortal verse,
 Such as the meeting soul° may pierce,
 In notes with many a winding bout° a passage

Of linkèd sweetness long drawn out) 140
With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running,
Untwisting all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony ;
That Orpheus'° self may heave his head 145
From golden slumber on a bed
Of heaped Elysian° flowers, and hear
Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto to have quite set free
His half-regained Eurydice.° 150
These delights if thou canst give,
Mirth, with thee I mean to live.°

IL PENSEROSO°

HENCE, vain deluding Joys,
The brood of Folly without father bred !
How little you bested,° help
Or fill the fixèd mind with all your toys !° help
Dwell in some idle brain, help 5
And fancies fond° with gaudy shapes possess,°
As thick and numberless
As the gay motes that people the sun-beams,
Or likest° hovering dreams, retire
The fickle pensioners° of Morpheus' train. 10
But, hail ! thou Goddess sage and holy !
Hail, divinest Melancholy !° for me
Whose saintly visage is too bright
To hit° as we write the sense of human sight,
And therefore to our weaker view 15
O'erlaid with black, staid Wisdom's hue ;
Black, but such as in esteem
Prince Memnon's° sister might beseem, ethiopian
Or that starred Ethiop queen° that strove
To set her beauty's praise above 20
The Sea-Nymphs, and their powers offended.
Yet thou art higher far descended :

Thee bright-haired Vesta<sup>o</sup> long of yore
To solitary Saturn bore ;
His daughter she ; in Saturn's reign 25
Such mixture was not held a stain.
Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her, and in secret shades
Of woody Ida's<sup>o</sup> inmost grove,
Whilst yet there was no fear of Jove. 30
Come, pensive Nun, devout and pure,
Sober, steadfast, and demure,
All in a robe of darkest grain,<sup>o color</sup>
Flowing with majestic train,
And sable stole<sup>o</sup> of cypress lawn<sup>o</sup> 35
Over thy decent shoulders drawn.
Come ; but keep thy wonted state,<sup>o dignity</sup>
With even step, and musing gait,
And looks commercing<sup>o</sup> with the skies,
Thy rapt<sup>o</sup> soul sitting in thine eyes : 40
There, held in holy passion still,
Forget thyself to marble,<sup>o</sup> till
With a sad<sup>o</sup> leaden<sup>o</sup> downward cast<sup>o</sup>
Thou fix them on the earth as fast.
And join with thee calm Peace and Quiet, 45
Spare Fast,<sup>o</sup> that oft with gods doth diet,

And hears the Muses in a ring
 Aye round about Jove's altar sing ;
 And add to these retired Leisure,
 That in trim gardens takes his pleasure ; 50
 But, first and chiefest, with thee bring Him that yon° soars on golden wing,
 Guiding the fiery wheelèd throne,
 The Cherub Contemplation ;°
 And the mute Silence hist° along, 55
 'Less Philomel° will deign a song,
 In her sweetest saddest plight,°
 Smoothing the rugged brow of Night,
 While Cynthia° checks° her dragon yoke°
 Gently o'er the accustomed oak. 60
 Sweet bird,° that shunn'st the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholy !
 Thee, chauntress, oft the woods among
 I woo, to hear thy even-song ;
 And, missing thee, I walk unseen° 65
 On the dry smooth-shaven green,
 To behold the wandering moon,
 Riding near her highest noon,
 Like one that had been led astray
 Through the heaven's wide pathless way, 70

And oft, as if her head she bowed,
Stooping through a fleecy cloud.
Oft, on a plat° of rising ground,
I hear the far-off curfew° sound,
Over some° wide-watered shore, 75
Swinging slow with sullen roar ;
Or, if the air will not permit,
Some still removèd° place will fit,
Where glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom, 80
Far from all resort of mirth,
Save the cricket on the hearth,
Or the bellman's° drowsy charm°
To bless the doors from nightly harm.
Or let my lamp, at midnight hour, 85
Be seen in some high lonely tower,
Where I may oft outwatch the Bear,°
With thrice-great Hermes,° or unsphere°
The spirit of Plato, to unfold
What worlds or what vast regions hold 90
The immortal mind that hath forsook°
Her mansion in this fleshly nook ;
And° of those demons that are found
In fire, air, flood, or underground,°

Whose power hath a true consent	95
With planet or with element.
Sometime let gorgeous Tragedy
In sceptred° pall° come sweeping by,
Presenting Thebes,° or Pelops' line,
Or the tale of Troy divine,	100
Or what (though rare) of later age
Ennobled hath the buskin'd° stage.
But, O sad Virgin ! that thy power
Might raise Musæus° from his bower ;
Or bid the soul of Orpheus° sing	105
Such notes as, warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek,
And made Hell grant what love did seek ;
Or call up him that left half-told°
The story of Cambuscan° bold,	110
Of Camball, and of Algarsife,
And who had Canace to wife,
That owned the virtuous° ring and glass,
And of the wondrous horse of brass
On which the Tartar king did ride ;	115
And if aught else great bards beside
In sage and solemn tunes have sung,
Of turneys, and of trophies hung,

Of forests, and enchantments drear,
Where more is meant than meets the ear.° 120
Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Till civil-suited° Morn appear,
Not tricked and frownc'd, as she was wont
With the Attic boy° to hunt,
But kerchieft in a comely cloud, 125
While rocking winds are piping loud,
Or ushered with a shower still,
When the gust hath blown his° fill,
Ending on the rustling leaves,
With minute-drops° from off the eaves. 130
And, when the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me, Goddess, bring
To archèd walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown,° that Sylvan° loves,
Of pine, or monumental° oak, 135
Where the rude axe with heavèd stroke
Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
Or fright them from their hallowed haunt.
There, in close covert, by some brook,
Where no profaner eye may look, 140
Hide me from day's garish° eye,
While the bee with honeyed thigh,

That at her flowery work doth sing,
And the waters murmuring,
With such consort<sup>o</sup> as they keep, 145
Entice the dewy-feathered Sleep.
And let some strange mysterious dream
Wave at his wings, in airy stream
Of lively portraiture displayed,
Softly on my eyelids laid ;<sup>o</sup> 150
And, as I wake, <sup>let</sup> sweet music breathe
Above, about, or underneath,
Sent by some Spirit to mortals good,
Or the unseen Genius<sup>o</sup> of the wood.
But let my due<sup>o</sup> feet never fail 155
To walk the studious cloister's pale,<sup>o</sup>
And love the high embowèd roof,
With antique pillars massy-proof,<sup>o</sup>
And storied windows<sup>o</sup> richly dight,<sup>o</sup>
Casting a dim religious light. 160
There let the pealing organ blow,
To the full-voiced quire below,
In service high and anthems clear,
As may with sweetness, through mine ear,
Dissolve me into ecstasies, 165
And bring all Heaven before mine eyes.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell° 170
Of every star that heaven doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew,
Till old experience do attain
To something like prophetic strain.
These pleasures, Melancholy, give ; 175
And I with thee will choose to live.

ARCADES

Part of an Entertainment presented to the Countess Dowager of Derby at Harefield by some Noble Persons of her Family; who appear on the Scene in pastoral habit, moving toward the seat of state, with this song :

I. Song

Look, Nymphs and Shepherds, look !
 What sudden blaze of majesty
 Is that which we from hence descry,
 Too divine to be mistook ?°

    This, this is she 5
 To whom our vows and wishes bend :
 Here our solemn search hath end.
 Fame,° that her high worth to raise
 Seemed erst so lavish and profuse,
 We may justly now accuse 10
 Of detraction from her praise :
 Less than half we find expressed ;
 Envy bid conceal the rest.

Mark what radiant state° she spreads,
 In circle round her shining throne 15

Shooting her beams like silver threads :
 This, this is she alone,
     Sitting like a goddess bright
     In the centre of her light.

Might she the wise Latona<sup>o</sup> be, 20
 Or the towered Cybele,<sup>o</sup>
 Mother of a hundred gods ?
 Juno dares not give her odds :<sup>o</sup>
     Who had thought this clime had held
     A deity so unparalleled ? 25

As they come forward, THE GENIUS OF THE WOOD<sup>o</sup> appears, and, turning toward them, speaks.

Gen. Stay, gentle<sup>o</sup> Swains, for, though in this disguise,
 I see bright honour sparkle through your eyes ;
 Of famous Arcady<sup>o</sup> ye are, and sprung
 Of that renownèd flood, so often sung,
 Divine Alpheus, who, by secret sluice, 30
 Stole under seas to meet his Arethuse ;<sup>o</sup>
 And ye, the breathing roses of the wood,
 Fair silver-buskin'd Nymphs,<sup>o</sup> as great and good.

I know this quest° of yours and free° intent
Was all in honour and devotion meant 35
To the great mistress of yon princely shrine,
Whom with low reverence I adore as mine,
And with all helpful service will comply
To further this night's glad solemnity,
And lead ye where ye may more near behold 40
What shallow-searching Fame hath left untold ;
Which I full oft, amidst these shades alone,
Have sat to wonder at, and gaze upon.
For know, by lot from Jove, I am the Power
Of this fair wood, and live in oaken bower, 45
To nurse the saplings tall, and curl° the grove
With ringlets quaint and wanton windings wove ;
And all my plants I save from nightly ill
Of noisome winds and blasting vapours chill ;
And from the boughs brush off the evil dew, 50
And heal the harms of thwarting° thunder blue,
Or what the cross dire-looking planet° smites,
Or hurtful worm° with cankered venom bites.
When evening grey doth rise, I fetch my round
Over the mount, and all this hallowed ground ; 55
And early, ere the odorous breath of morn
Awakes the slumbering leaves, or tasselled° horn

Shakes the high thicket, haste I all about,
Number my ranks, and visit every sprout
With puissant<sup>o</sup> words and murmurs<sup>o</sup> made to bless. 60
But else, in deep of night, when drowsiness
Hath locked up mortal sense, then listen I
To the celestial Sirens' harmony,<sup>o</sup>
That sit upon the nine infolded spheres,
And sing to those that hold the vital shears, 65
And turn the adamantine spindle round
On which the fate of gods and men is wound.
Such sweet compulsion doth in music lie,
To lull the daughters of Necessity,
And keep unsteady Nature to her law, 70
And the low world in measured motion draw
After the heavenly tune, which none can hear<sup>o</sup>
Of human mould with gross unpurgèd ear.
And yet such music worthiest were to blaze
The peerless height of her immortal praise 75
Whose lustre leads us, and for her most fit,
If my inferior hand or voice could hit
Inimitable sounds. Yet, as we go,
Whate'er the skill of lesser gods can show
I will assay, her worth to celebrate, 80
And so attend ye toward her glittering state ;<sup>o</sup>

Where ye may all, that are of noble stem,
Approach, and kiss her sacred vesture's hem.

II. Song

O'er the smooth enamelled green,
Where no print of step hath been, 85
Follow me, as I sing
And touch the warbled string :
Under the shady roof
Of branching elm star-proof
Follow me. 90
I will bring you where she sits,
Clad in splendor as befits
Her deity.
Such a rural Queen
All Arcadia hath not seen. 95

III. Song

Nymphs and Shepherds, dance no more
By sandy Ladon's° liliated banks ;
On old Lycæus,° or Cyllene° hoar,
Trip no more in twilight ranks ;
Though Erymanth° your loss deplore, 100

A better soil shall give ye thanks.
From the stony Mænalus°
Bring your flocks, and live with us ;
Here ye shall have greater grace,
To serve the Lady of this place.
Though Syrinx° your Pan's mistress were,
Yet Syrinx well might wait on her.

105

Such a rural Queen
All Arcadia hath not seen.

COMUS

“A MASQUE PRESENTED AT LUDLOW CASTLE, 1634, &c.”

(For the Title-pages of the Editions of 1637 and 1645 see Notes at p. 000 and p. 000.)

DEDICATION OF LAWES' EDITION OF 1637.

(Reprinted in the Edition of 1645, but omitted in that of 1673.)

“To the Right Honourable John, Lord Brackley, son and heir-apparent to the Earl of Bridgewater, &c.”

“My Lord,

“This Poem, which received its first occasion of birth from yourself and others of your noble family, and much honour from your own person in the performance, now returns again to make a final dedication of itself to you. Although not openly acknowledged by the Author, yet it is a legitimate offspring, so lovely and so much desired that the often copying of it hath tired my pen to give my several friends satisfaction, and brought me to a necessity of producing it to the public view, and now to offer it up, in all rightful devotion, to those fair hopes and rare endowments of your much-promising youth, which give a full assurance to all that know you of a future excellence. Live, sweet Lord, to be the honour of your name; and receive this as your own from the hands of him who hath by many favours been long obliged to your most honoured Parents, and, as in this representation your attendant Thyrsis, so now in all real expression

“Your faithful and most humble Servant,

“H. Lawes.”

“ The Copy of a Letter written by Sir Henry Wotton to the Author upon the following poem.”

(In the Edition of 1645; omitted in that of 1673.)

“ From the College, this 13 of April, 1638.

“ Sir,

“ It was a special favour when you lately bestowed upon me here the first taste of your acquaintance, though no longer than to make me know that I wanted more time to value it and to enjoy it rightly; and, in truth, if I could then have imagined your farther stay in these parts, which I understood afterwards by Mr. H., I would have been bold, in our vulgar phrase, to mend my draught (for you left me with an extreme thirst), and to have begged your conversation again, jointly with your said learned friend, over a poor meal or two, that we might have banded together some good Authors of the ancient time; among which I observed you to have been familiar.

“ Since your going, you have charged me with new obligations, both for a very kind letter from you dated the 6th of this month, and for a dainty piece of entertainment which came therewith. Wherein I should much commend the tragical part, if the lyrical did not ravish me with a certain Doric delicacy in your Songs and Odes, whereunto I must plainly confess to have seen yet nothing parallel in our language: Ipsa mollities. But I must not omit to tell you that I now only owe you thanks for intimating unto me (how modestly soever) the true artificer. For the work itself I had viewed some good while before with singular delight ; having received it from our common friend Mr. R., in the very close of the late R.'s Poems, printed at Oxford : whereunto it was added (as I now suppose) that the accessory might help out the principal, according to the art of Stationers, and to leave the reader con la bocca dolce.

“ Now, Sir, concerning your travels ; wherein I may challenge a little more privilege of discourse with you. I suppose you will not blanch Paris in your way : therefore I have been bold to trouble you with a few lines to Mr. M. B., whom you shall easily find attending the young Lord S. as his governor ; and you may surely receive from him good directions for the shaping of your farther journey into Italy where he did reside, by my choice, some time for the King, after mine own recess from Venice.

“ I should think that your best line will be through the whole length of France to Marseilles, and thence by sea to Genoa ; whence the passage into Tuscany is as diurnal as a Gravesend barge. I hasten, as you do, to Florence or Siena, the rather to tell you a short story, from the interest you have given me in your safety.

“ At Siena I was tabled in the house of one Alberto Scipioni, an old Roman courtier in dangerous times ; having been steward to the Duca di Pagliano, who with all his family were strangled, save this only man that escaped by foresight of the tempest. With him I had often much chat of those affairs, into which he took pleasure to look back from his native harbour ; and, at my departure toward Rome (which had been the centre of his experience), I had won his confidence enough to beg his advice how I might carry myself there without offence of others or of mine own conscience. ‘Signor Arrigo mio,’ says he, ‘I pensieri stretti ed il viso sciolto will go safely over the whole world.’ Of which Delphian oracle (for so I have found it) your judgment doth need no commentary; and therefore, Sir, I will commit you, with it, to the best of all securities, God’s dear love, remaining

“Your friend, as much to command as any of longer date, “Henry Wotton.”

Postscript

“Sir: I have expressly sent this my footboy to prevent your departure without some acknowledgment from me of the receipt of your obliging letter; having myself through some business, I know not how, neglected the ordinary conveyance. In any part where I shall understand you fixed, I shall be glad and diligent to entertain you with home-novelties, even for some fomentation of our friendship, too soon interrupted in the cradle.”

THE PERSONS

THE ATTENDANT SPIRIT, afterwards in the habit of THYRSIS.
COMUS, with his Crew.

THE LADY.

FIRST BROTHER.

SECOND BROTHER.

SABRINA, the Nymph.

The Chief Persons which presented were : —

The Lord Brackley ;

Mr. Thomas Egerton, his Brother ;

The Lady Alice Egerton.

[This list of the Persons, &c., appeared in the Edition of 1645, but was omitted in that of 1673.]

COMUS

The first Scene discovers a wild wood

The ATTENDANT SPIRIT descends or enters

BEFORE the starry threshold of Jove's court
 My mansion is, where those° immortal shapes
 Of bright aerial spirits live insphered°
 In regions mild of calm and serene° air,
 Above the smoke and stir of this dim spot 5
 Which men call Earth, and, with low-thoughted care,
 Confined and pestered° in this pifold° here,
 Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being,
 Unmindful of the crown that Virtue gives,
 After this mortal change,° to her true servants 10
 Amongst the enthroned gods° on sainted seats.
 Yet some there be that by due° steps aspire
 To lay their just hands on that golden key°
 That opes the palace of eternity.
 To such my errand is ; and, but for such, 15
 I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds°
 With the rank vapours of this sin-worn mould.°
 But to my task. Neptune, besides the sway
 Of every salt flood and each ebbing stream,

Took in, by lot 'twixt high and nether Jove,° 20
Imperial rule of all the sea-girt isles
That, like to rich and various gems, inlay
The unadornèd° bosom of the deep ;
Which he, to grace his tributary gods,
By course commits to several° government, 25
And gives them leave to wear their sapphire crowns
And wield their little tridents. But this Isle,°
The greatest and the best of all the main,
He quarters° to his blue-haired° deities ;
And all this tract° that fronts the falling sun 30
A noble Peer° of mickle° trust and power
Has in his charge, with tempered awe to guide
An old and haughty° nation, proud in arms :
Where his fair offspring, nursed in princely lore,
Are coming to attend their father's state,° 35
And new-intrusted sceptre. But their way
Lies through the perplexed° paths of this drear wood,
The nodding horror° of whose shady brows
Threats the forlorn and wandering passenger ;
And here their tender age might suffer peril, 40
But that, by quick command from sovran Jove,
I was despatched for their defence and guard !
And listen why ; for I will tell you now

What never yet was heard in tale or song,
From old or modern bard, in hall or bower.° 45

Bacchus, that first from out the purple grape
Crushed the sweet poison of misusèd wine,
After the Tuscan mariners transformed,°
Coasting the Tyrrhene shore,° as the winds listed,°
On Circe's island fell. (Who knows not Circe,° 50
The daughter of the Sun, whose charmèd cup
Whoever tasted lost his upright shape
And downward fell into a grovelling swine?)
This Nymph, that gazed upon his clustering locks
With ivy berries wreathed, and his blithe youth, 55
Had by him, ere he parted thence, a son°
Much like his father, but his mother more,
Whom therefore she brought up, and Comus° named :
Who, ripe° and frolic of his full-grown age,°
Roving the Celtic and Iberian fields,° 60
At last betakes him to this ominous wood,
And, in thick shelter of black shades imbowered,
Excels his mother at her mighty art ;
Offering to every weary traveller
His orient° liquor in a crystal glass, 65
To quench the drouth of Phœbus ;° which as they taste

(For most do taste through fond° intemperate thirst),
Soon as the potion works, their human count'nance,
The express resemblance° of the gods, is changed
Into some brutish form of wolf or bear, 70
Or ounce° or tiger, hog, or bearded goat,
All other parts remaining as they were.
And they, so perfect is their misery,
Not once perceive their foul disfigurement,
But boast themselves more comely than before, 75
And all their friends and native home forget,
To roll with pleasure in a sensual sty.°
Therefore, when any favoured of high Jove
Chances to pass through this adventurous° glade,
Swift as the sparkle of a glancing star 80
I shoot from heaven, to give him safe convoy,
As now I do. But first I must put off
These my sky-robcs spun out of Iris' woof,°
And take the weeds and likeness of a swain
That to the service of this house belongs, 85
Who, with his soft pipe and smooth-dittied song,
Well knows to° still the wild winds when they roar,
And hush the waving woods ; nor of less faith,°
And in this office of his mountain watch
Likeliest, and nearest to the present aid 90

Of this occasion.° But I hear the tread
Of hateful steps ; I must be viewless now.

COMUS enters, with a charming-rod in one hand, his glass in the other ; with him a rout of monsters, headed like sundry sorts of wild beasts, but otherwise like men and women, their apparel glistening. They come in making a riotous and unruly noise, with torches in their hands.

Comus. The star° that bids the shepherd fold
Now the top of heaven doth hold ;
And the gilded car of day 95
His glowing axle doth allay
In the steep° Atlantic stream :°
And the slope° sun his upward beam
Shoots against the dusky° pole,
Pacing toward the other goal 100
Of his chamber in the east.°
Meanwhile, welcome joy and feast,
Midnight shout and revelry,
Tipsy dance and jollity.
Braid your locks with rosy twine,° 105
Dropping odours, dropping wine.
Rigour now is gone to bed ;
And Advice with scrupulous head,
Strict Age, and sour Severity,
With their grave saws,° in slumber lie. 110

We, that are of purer fire,
Imitate the starry quire,<sup>o</sup>
Who, in their nightly watchful spheres,<sup>o</sup>
Lead in swift round the months and years.
The sounds and seas, with all their finny drove, 115
Now to the moon in wavering morrice<sup>o</sup> move ;
And on the tawny sands and shelves
Trip the pert<sup>o</sup> fairies and the dapper<sup>o</sup> elves.
By dimpled brook and fountain-brim,
The wood-nymphs, decked with daisies trim, 120
Their merry wakes<sup>o</sup> and pastimes keep :
What hath night to do with sleep ?
Night hath better sweets to prove ;
Venus now wakes, and wakens Love.
Come, let us our rites begin ; 125
'Tis only daylight that makes sin,
Which these dun shades will ne'er report.
Hail, goddess of nocturnal sport,
Dark-veiled Cotytto,<sup>o</sup> to whom the secret flame
Of midnight torches burns ! mysterious dame, 130
That ne'er art called<sup>o</sup> but when the dragon womb<sup>o</sup>
Of Stygian darkness spets<sup>o</sup> her thickest gloom,
And makes one blot of all the air !
Stay thy cloudy ebon chair,

Wherein thou ridest with Hecat', ° and befriend 135
 Us thy vowed priests, till utmost end
 Of all thy dues be done, and none left out,
 Ere the blabbing eastern scout,
 The nice ° Morn on the Indian ° steep,
 From her cabined loop-hole ° peep, 140
 And to the tell-tale Sun descry
 Our concealed solemnity.
 Come, knit hands, and beat the ground
 In a light fantastic ° round. °

The Measure °

Break off, break off ! I feel the different pace ° 145
 Of some chaste footing near about this ground.
 Run to your shrouds ° within these brakes ° and trees ;
 Our number may affright. Some virgin sure
 (For so I can distinguish by mine art)
 Benighted in these woods ! Now to my charms, 150
 And to my wily trains : ° I shall ere long
 Be well stocked with as fair a herd as grazed
 About my mother Circe. Thus I hurl °
 My dazzling spells into the spongy air, °
 Of power to cheat the eye with blear illusion, ° 155
 And give it false presentments, ° lest the place

And my quaint° habits° breed astonishment,
And put the damsel to suspicious flight ;
Which must not be, for that's against my course.
I, under fair pretence of friendly ends, 160
And well-placed words of glozing° courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unplaussible,
Wind me° into the easy-hearted man,
And hug him into snares. When once her eye
Hath met the virtue° of this magic dust 165
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear.°
But here she comes ; I fairly° step aside,
And hearken, if I may her business hear.

The LADY enters

Lady. This way the sound was, if mine ear be true,
My best guide now. Methought it was the sound 171
Of riot and ill-managed merriment,
Such as the jocund flute or gamesome pipe
Stirs up among the loose° unlettered hinds,
When, for their teeming flocks and granges° full, 175
In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan,°
And thank the gods amiss. I should be loth

To meet the rudeness and swilled insolence°
Of such late wassailers ;° yet, oh ! where else
Shall I inform my unacquainted feet 180
In the blind mazes of this tangled wood ?
My brothers, when they saw me wearied out
With this long way, resolving here to lodge
Under the spreading favour of these pines,
Stepped, as they said, to the next thicket-side 185
To bring me berries, or such cooling fruit
As the kind hospitable woods provide.
They left me then when the grey-hooded Even,
Like a sad° votarist° in palmer's° weed,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain.° 190
But where they are, and why they come not back,
Is now the labour of my thoughts. 'Tis likeliest
They had engaged° their wandering steps too far ;
And envious darkness, ere they could return,
Had stole° them from me. Else, O thievish Night,
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end, 195
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That Nature hung in heaven, and filled their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller ? 200
This is the place, as well as I may guess,

Whence even now the tumult of loud mirth
 Was rife,° and perfect° in my listening ear ;
 Yet nought but single° darkness do I find.
 What might this be ? A thousand fantasies      205
 Begin to throng into my memory,
 Of calling shapes, and beckoning shadows dire,
 And airy tongues that syllable men's names
 On sands and shores and desert wildernesses.
 These thoughts may startle well,° but not astound 210
 The virtuous mind, that ever walks attended
 By a strong siding° champion, Conscience.
 O, welcome, pure-eyed Faith, white-handed Hope,
 Thou hovering angel girt with golden wings,
 And thou unblemished form of Chastity !°      215
 I see ye visibly, and now believe
 That He, the Supreme Good, to whom all things ill
 Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
 Would send a glistening° guardian, if need were,
 To keep my life and honour unassailed. . . .      220
 Was I deceived, or did a sable cloud
 Turn forth her silver lining on the night ?
 I did not err : there does a sable cloud
 Turn forth her silver lining on the night,
 And casts° a gleam over this tufted grove.      225

I cannot hallo to my brothers, but Such noise as I can make to be heard farthest
I'll venture ; for my new-enlivened spirits
Prompt me, and they perhaps are not far off.

Song

Sweet Echo, ° sweetest nymph, that liv'st unseen 230
Within thy airy shell °

By slow Meander's ° margent ° green,
And in the violet-embroidered vale
Where the love-lorn nightingale
Nightly to thee her sad song mourneth well : 235

Canst thou not tell me of a gentle pair

That likest thy Narcissus ° are ?

O, if thou have

Hid them in some flowery cave,

Tell me but where, 240

Sweet Queen of Parley, ° Daughter of the Sphere ! °

So may'st thou be translated to the skies,

And give resounding grace ° to all Heaven's harmonies !

Comus. Can any mortal mixture of earth's mould
Breathe such divine enchanting ravishment ? 245

Sure something holy lodges in that breast,

And with these raptures moves the vocal° air
To testify his° hidden residence.
How sweetly did they float upon the wings
Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night, 250
At every fall° smoothing the raven down
Of darkness till it smiled ! I have oft heard
My mother Circe with the Sirens° three,
Amidst the flowery-kirtled° Naiades,°
Culling their potent herbs and baleful drugs, 255
Who, as they sung, would take the prisoned soul,
And lap it in Elysium :° Scylla° wept,
And chid her barking waves into attention,
And fell Charybdis murmured soft applause.
Yet they in pleasing slumber lulled the sense, 260
And in sweet madness robbed it of itself ;
But such a sacred and home-felt° delight,
Such sober certainty of waking bliss,
I never heard till now. I'll speak to her,
And she shall be my queen. — Hail, foreign wonder !
Whom certain these rough shades did never breed, 266
Unless° the goddess that in rural shrine
Dwell'st here with Pan° or Sylvan,° by blest song
Forbidding every bleak unkindly fog
To touch the prosperous growth of this tall wood. 270

Lady. Nay, gentle shepherd, ill is lost<sup>o</sup> that praise
That is addressed to unattending ears.
Not any boast of skill, but extreme shift<sup>o</sup>
How to regain my severed company,
Compelled me to awake the courteous Echo 275
To give me answer from her mossy couch.

Comus. What chance, good Lady, hath bereft you thus?

Lady. Dim darkness and this heavy labyrinth.

Comus. Could that divide you from near-ushering guides?

Lady. They left me weary on a grassy turf. 280

Comus. By falsehood, or discourtesy, or why?

Lady. To seek i' the valley some cool friendly spring.

Comus. And left your fair side all unguarded, Lady?

Lady. They were but twain, and purposed quick return.

Comus. Perhaps forestalling<sup>o</sup> night prevented them.

Lady. How easy my misfortune is to hit!<sup>o</sup> 286

Comus. Imports their loss,<sup>o</sup> beside the present need?

Lady. No less than if I should my brothers lose.

Comus. Were they of manly prime, or youthful bloom?

Lady. As smooth as Hebe's<sup>o</sup> their unrazored lips.<sup>o</sup>

Comus. Two such I saw, what time<sup>o</sup> the laboured<sup>o</sup>

OX

291

In his loose traces from the furrow came,

And the swinked<sup>o</sup> hedger at his supper sat.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,

That crawls along the side of yon small hill, 295

Plucking ripe clusters from the tender shoots;

Their port<sup>o</sup> was more than human, as they stood.

I took it for a faery vision

Of some gay creatures of the element,<sup>o</sup>

That in the colours of the rainbow live, 300

And play i' the plighted<sup>o</sup> clouds. I was awe-strook,<sup>o</sup>

And, as I passed, I worshipped. If those you seek,

It were a journey like the path to Heaven

To help you find them.

Lady. Gentle villager,

What readiest way would bring me to that place? 305

Comus. Due west it rises from this shrubby point.

Lady. To find out that, good shepherd, I suppose,
In such a scant allowance of star-light,

Would overtask the best land-pilot's art,
Without the sure guess of well-practised feet. 310

Comus. I know each lane, and every alley green,
Dingle,° or bushy dell,° of this wild wood,
And every bosky bourn° from side to side,
My daily walks and ancient neighbourhood ;
And, if your stray attendance° be yet lodged, 315
Or shroud° within these limits, I shall know
Ere morrow wake, or the low-roosted° lark
From her thatched pallet° rouse.° If otherwise,
I can conduct you, Lady, to a low
But loyal cottage, where you may be safe 320
Till further quest.

Lady. Shepherd, I take thy word
And trust thy honest-offered courtesy,
Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds,
With smoky rafters, than in tapestry halls
And courts° of princes, where it first was named, 325
And yet is most pretended. In a place
Less warranted° than this, or less secure,
I cannot be, that I should fear to change it.
Eye me, blest Providence, and square° my trial
To my proportioned strength ! shepherd, lead
on. . . . 330

The Two BROTHERS

Eld. Bro. Unmuffle, ye faint stars ; and thou, fair moon,

That wont'st to love the traveller's benison,°
 Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
 And disinherit° Chaos, that reigns here
 In double night of darkness and of shades ; 335
 Or, if your influence be quite dammed up
 With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
 Though a rush-candle° from the wicker hole°
 Of some clay habitation, visit us
 With thy long levelled rule° of streaming light, 340
 And thou shalt be our star of Arcady,°
 Or Tyrian° Cynosure.°

Sec. Bro. Or, if our eyes
 Be barred that happiness, might we but hear
 The folded flocks, penned in their wattled cotes,°
 Or sound of pastoral reed with oaten stops,° 345
 Or whistle from the lodge, or village cock
 Count the night-watches to his feathery dames,
 'Twould be some solace yet, some little cheering,
 In this close dungeon of innumeros° boughs.
 But, oh, that hapless virgin, our lost sister ! 350

Where may she wander now, whither betake her
From the chill dew, amongst rude burs and thistles ?
Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now,
Or 'gainst the rugged bark of some broad elm
Leans<sup>o</sup> her unpillowed head, fraught with sad fears.
What if<sup>o</sup> in wild amazement and affright, 356
Or, while we speak, within the direful grasp
Of savage hunger, or of savage heat !<sup>o</sup>

Eld. Bro. Peace, brother : be not over-exquisite
To cast the fashion of uncertain evils ;<sup>o</sup> 360
For, grant they be so, while they rest unknown,
What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid ?
Or, if they be but false alarms of fear,
How bitter is such self-delusion ! 365
I do not think my sister so to seek,<sup>o</sup>
Or so unprincipled<sup>o</sup> in virtue's book,
And the sweet peace that goodness bosoms ever,
As that the single want of light and noise
(Not being in danger, as I trust she is not) 370
Could stir the constant mood of her calm thoughts,
And put them into misbecoming plight.<sup>o</sup> Virtue could see to do what Virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon

Were in the flat sea sunk. And Wisdom's self 375
Oft seeks to° sweet retired solitude,
Where, with her best nurse Contemplation,
She plumes her feathers, and lets grow her wings,
That, in the various bustle of resort,
Were all to-ruffled,° and sometimes impaired. 380
He that has light within his own clear breast
May sit i' the centre,° and enjoy bright day :
But he that hides a dark soul and foul thoughts
Benighted walks under the mid-day sun ;
Himself is his own dungeon.

Sec. Bro. 'Tis most true 385
That musing Meditation most affects°
The pensive secrecy of desert cell,
Far from the cheerful haunt of men and herds,
And sits as safe as in a senate-house ;
For who would rob a hermit of his weeds,° 390
His few books, or his beads,° or maple dish,
Or do his grey hairs any violence ?
But Beauty, like the fair Hesperian tree°
Laden with blooming gold, had need the guard
Of dragon-watch with unenchanted° eye 395
To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit,
From the rash hand of bold Incontinence.

You may as well spread out the unsunned° heaps
Of miser's treasure by an outlaw's den,
And tell me it is safe, as bid me hope 400
Danger will wink on° Opportunity,
And let a single helpless maiden pass
Uninjured in this wild surrounding waste.
Of night or loneliness it recks me not ;°
I fear the dread events that dog them both, 405
Lest some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our unowned° sister.

Eld. Bro. I do not, brother,
Infer° as if I thought my sister's state
Secure without all doubt or controversy ;
Yet, where an equal poise of hope and fear 410
Does arbitrate the event, my nature is
That I incline to hope rather than fear,
And gladly banish squint° suspicion.
My sister is not so defenceless left
As you imagine ; she has a hidden strength, 415
Which you remember not.

Sec. Bro. What hidden strength,
Unless the strength of Heaven, if you mean that ?

Eld. Bro. I mean that too, but yet a hidden strength,
Which, if° Heaven gave it, may be termed her own.

'Tis chastity, my brother, chastity : 420
She that has that is clad in complete steel,
And, like a quivered nymph with arrows keen,
May trace<sup>o</sup> huge forests, and unbarboured<sup>o</sup> heaths,
Infamous hills, and sandy perilous wilds ;
Where, through the sacred rays of chastity, 425
No savage fierce, bandite,<sup>o</sup> or mountaineer,
Will dare to soil her virgin purity.
Yea, there where very desolation dwells,
By grots and caverns shagged with horrid<sup>o</sup> shades,
She may pass on with unblenched<sup>o</sup> majesty 430
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption.
Some say no evil thing that walks by night,
In fog or fire, by lake or moorish fen,
Blue meagre hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost,
That breaks his magic chains at curfew<sup>o</sup> time, 435
No goblin or swart faery of the mine,<sup>o</sup>
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity.
Do ye believe me yet, or shall I call
Antiquity from the old schools of Greece
To testify the arms of chastity ? 440
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen for ever chaste,
Wherewith she tamed the brindled<sup>o</sup> lioness

And spotted mountain-pard, but set at nought
The frivolous bolt of Cupid ; gods and men 445 Feared her stern frown, and she was queen o' the woods.

What was that snaky-headed Gorgon° shield
That wise Minerva wore, unconquered virgin,
Wherewith she freezed her foes to congealed stone,
But rigid looks of chaste austerity, 450
And noble grace that dashed brute violence
With sudden adoration and blank awe ?
So dear to Heaven is saintly chastity
That, when a soul is found sincerely so,
A thousand liveried angels lackey° her, 455
Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt,
And in clear dream and solemn vision
Tell her of things that no gross ear can hear ;
Till oft converse° with heavenly habitants
Begin to cast a beam on the outward shape, 460
The unpolluted temple of the mind,
And turns it by degrees to the soul's essence,
Till all be made immortal. But, when lust,
By unchaste looks, loose gestures, and foul talk,
But most by lewd and lavish act of sin, 465
Lets in defilement to the inward parts,

The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies, and imbrutes, ° till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being.
Such are those thick and gloomy shadows damp 470
Oft seen in charnel °-vaults and sepulchres,
Lingering and sitting by a new-made grave,
As loth to leave the body that it ° loved,
And linked itself by carnal sensuality °
To a degenerate and degraded state. 475

Sec. Bro. How charming is divine Philosophy !
Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose,
But musical as is Apollo's lute,
And a perpetual feast of nectared ° sweets,
Where no crude surfeit reigns.

Eld. Bro. List ! list ! I hear 480
Some far-off hallo break the silent air.

Sec. Bro. Methought so too ; what should it be ?

Eld. Bro. For certain,
Either some one, like us, night-foundered here,
Or else some neighbour woodman, or, at worst,
Some roving robber calling to his fellows. 485

Sec. Bro. Heaven keep my sister ! Again, again, and near !

Best draw, and stand upon our guard.

Eld. Bro.

I'll hallo.

If he be friendly, he comes well : if not,
Defence is a good cause, and Heaven be for us !

The ATTENDANT SPIRIT, habited like a shepherd

That hallo I should know. What are you ? Speak.
Come not too near ; you fall on iron stakes<sup>o</sup> else. 491

Spir. What voice is that ? my young Lord ? speak again.

Sec. Bro. O brother, 'tis my father's Shepherd, sure.

Eld. Bro. Thyrsis !<sup>o</sup> whose artful strains have oft delayed

The huddling brook to hear his madrigal,<sup>o</sup> 495
And sweetened every musk-rose of the dale.

How camest thou here, good swain ? Hath any ram Slipped from the fold, or young kid lost his dam,
Or straggling wether the pent flock forsook ?
How couldst thou find this dark sequestered nook ? 500

Spir. O my loved master's heir, and his next<sup>o</sup> joy,
I came not here on such a trivial toy<sup>o</sup>
As a strayed ewe, or to pursue the stealth
Of pilfering wolf ; not all the fleecy wealth
That doth enrich these downs is worth a thought 505

To° this my errand, and the care it brought.

But, oh ! my virgin Lady, where is she ?

How chance° she is not in your company ?

Eld. Bro. To tell thee sadly,° Shepherd, without blame

Or our neglect, we lost her as we came. 510

Spir. Ay me unhappy ! then my fears are true.

Eld. Bro. What fears, good Thyrsis ? Prithee briefly shew.

Spir. I'll tell ye. 'Tis not vain or fabulous
(Though so esteemed by shallow ignorance)

What the sage poets,° taught by the heavenly Muse,
Storied of old in high immortal verse 516

Of dire Chimeras° and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks whose entrance leads to Hell ;
For such there be, but unbelief is blind.

Within the navel° of this hideous wood, 520

Immured in cypress shades, a sorcerer dwells,

Of Bacchus and of Circe born, great Comus,

Deep skilled in all his mother's witcheries,

And here to every thirsty wanderer

By sly enticement gives his baneful cup, 525

With many murmurs° mixed, whose pleasing poison

The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,

And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unmoulding<sup>o</sup> reason's mintage
Charactered in the face. This have I learnt 530
Tending my flocks hard by i' the hilly crofts<sup>o</sup>
That brow<sup>o</sup> this bottom glade; whence night by night

He and his monstrous rout are heard to howl
Like stabled wolves,<sup>o</sup> or tigers at their prey,
Doing abhorred rites to Hecate<sup>o</sup> 535

In their obscurèd haunts of inmost bowers.
Yet have they many baits and guileful spells
To inveigle and invite the unwary sense
Of them that pass unweeting<sup>o</sup> by the way.

This evening late, by then<sup>o</sup> the chewing flocks 540
Had ta'en their supper on the savoury herb
Of knot-grass dew-besprent,<sup>o</sup> and were in fold,

I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle, and began, 545

Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
To meditate<sup>o</sup> my rural minstrelsy,
Till fancy had her fill. But ere a close<sup>o</sup>
The wonted roar was up amidst the woods,
And filled the air with barbarous dissonance; 550

At which I ceased, and listened them awhile,
Till an unusual stop° of sudden silence
Gave respite to the drowsy-flighted° steeds
That draw the litter of close-curtained Sleep.
At last a soft and solemn-breathing sound 555
Rose like a steam of rich distilled perfumes,
And stole upon the air, that even Silence°
Was took° ere she was ware, and wished she might Deny her nature, and be never more,
Still to be so displaced. I was all ear, 560
And took in strains that might create a soul
Under the ribs of Death. But, oh ! ere long
Too well I did perceive it was the voice
Of my most honoured Lady, your dear sister.
Amazed° I stood, harrowed with grief and fear ; 565
And 'O poor hapless nightingale,' thought I,
'How sweet thou sing'st, how near the deadly snare !'
Then down the lawns° I ran with headlong haste,
Through paths and turnings often trod by day,
Till, guided by mine ear, I found the place 570
Where that damned wizard, hid in sly disguise
(For so by certain signs I knew), had met Already, ere my best speed could prevent,°
The aidless innocent lady, his wished prey ;

Who gently asked if he had seen such two, 575
Supposing him some neighbour villager.
Longer I durst not stay, but soon I guessed
Ye were the two she meant ; with that I sprung
Into swift flight, till I had found you here ;
But further know I not.

Sec. Bro. O night and shades, 580
How are ye joined with hell in triple knot
Against the unarmed weakness of one virgin,
Alone and helpless ! Is this the confidence
You gave me, brother ?

Eld. Bro. Yes, and keep it still ;
Lean on it safely ; not a period° 585
Shall be unsaid for me. Against the threats
Of malice or of sorcery, or that power
Which erring men call Chance, this I hold firm :
Virtue may be assailed, but never hurt,
Surprised by unjust force, but not enthralled ; 590
Yea, even that which Mischief meant most harm
Shall in the happy trial° prove most glory.
But evil on itself shall back recoil,
And mix no more with goodness, when at last,
Gathered like scum, and settled to itself, 595
It shall be in eternal restless change

Self-fed and self-consumed. If this fail,
The pillared firmament° is rottenness,
And earth's base built on stubble. But come, let's
on !

Against the opposing will and arm of Heaven 600
May never this just sword be lifted up ;
But, for° that damned magician, let him be girt
With all the griesly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag° of Acheron,
Harpies° and Hydras,° or all the monstrous forms 605
'Twixt Africa and Ind, I'll find him out,
And force him to return his purchase° back,
Or drag him by the curls to a foul death,
Cursed as his life.

Spir. Alas ! good venturous youth,
I love thy courage yet, and bold emprise ;° 610
But here thy sword can do thee little stead.°
Far other arms and other weapons must
Be those that quell the might of hellish charms.
He with his bare° wand can unthread thy joints,
And crumble all thy sinews.

Eld. Bro. Why, prithee, Shepherd,
How durst thou then thyself approach so near 616
As to make this relation ?°

Spir.

Care and utmost shifts°

How to secure the Lady from surprisal
Brought to my mind a certain shepherd lad,°
Of small regard to see to, yet well skilled 620
In every virtuous° plant and healing herb
That spreads her verdant leaf to the morning ray.
He loved me well, and oft would beg me sing ;
Which when I did, he on the tender grass
Would sit, and hearken even to ecstasy, 625
And in requital ope his leathern scrip,°
And show me simples° of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties.
Amongst the rest a small unsightly root,
But of divine effect, he culled me out. 630
The leaf was darkish, and had prickles on it,
But in another country, as he said,
Bore a bright golden flower, but not in this soil :
Unknown, and like esteemed, and the dull swain
Treads on it daily with his clouted shoon ;° 635
And yet more med'cinal is it than that Moly°
That Hermes once to wise Ulysses gave.
He called it Hæmony,° and gave it me,
And bade me keep it as of sovran° use
'Gainst all enchantments, mildew blast, or damp, 640

Or ghastly Furies'° apparition.
 I pursed it up, but little reckoning made,
 Till now that this extremity compelled.
 But now I find it true ; for by this means
 I knew the foul enchanter, though disguised, 645
 Entered the very lime-twigs° of his spells,
 And yet came off. If you have this about you
 (As I will give you when we go) you may Boldly assault the necromancer's hall,
 Where if he be, with dauntless hardihood 650
 And brandished blade rush on him : break his glass,
 And shed the luscious liquor on the ground ;
 But seize his wand. Though he and his curst crew
 Fierce sign of battle make, and menace high,
 Or, like the sons of Vulcan, vomit smoke,° 655
 Yet will they soon retire, if he but shrink.

Eld. Bro. Thyrsis, lead on apace ; I'll follow thee ;
 And some good angel bear a shield before us !

The Scene changes to a stately palace, set out with all manner of deliciousness : soft music, tables spread with all dainties. COMUS appears with his rabble, and the LADY set in an enchanted Chair: to whom he offers his glass; which she puts by, and goes about° to rise

Comus. Nay, Lady, sit. If I but wave this wand,
 Your nerves are all chained up in alabaster, 660

And you a statue, or as Daphne<sup>o</sup> was,
Root-bound, that fled Apollo.

Lady. Fool, do not boast.

Thou canst not touch the freedom of my mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind<sup>o</sup>
Thou hast immanacled while Heaven sees good. 665

Comus. Why are you vexed, Lady? why do you frown?

Here dwell no frowns, nor anger; from these gates
Sorrow flies far. See, here be all the pleasures
That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts,
When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns 670
Brisk as the April buds in primrose season.

And first behold this cordial julep<sup>o</sup> here,
That flames and dances in his<sup>o</sup> crystal bounds,
With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mixed.
Not that Nepenthes,<sup>o</sup> which the wife of Thone 675

In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena
Is of such power to stir up joy as this,
To life so friendly, or so cool to thirst.
Why should you be so cruel to yourself,<sup>o</sup>
And to those dainty limbs, which Nature lent 680
For gentle usage and soft delicacy?

But you invert the covenants of her trust,

And harshly deal, like an ill borrower,
With that which you received on other terms,
Scorning the unexempt condition° 685
By which all mortal frailty must subsist,
Refreshment after toil, ease after pain,
That° have been tired all day without repast,
And timely rest have wanted. But, fair virgin,
This will restore all soon.

Lady. 'Twill not, false traitor ! 690
'Twill not restore the truth and honesty
That thou hast banished from thy tongue with lies.
Was this the cottage and the safe abode
Thou told'st me of ? What grim aspects° are these,
These oughly°-headed monsters ? Mercy guard me ! 695
Hence with thy brewed enchantments, foul deceiver !

Hast thou betrayed my credulous innocence
With vizored° falsehood and base forgery ?°
And wouldst thou seek again to trap me here
With liquorish° baits, fit to ensnare a brute ? 700
Were it a draught for Juno when she banquets,
I would not taste thy treasonous offer. None
But such as are good men can give good things ;

And that which is not good is not delicious
To a well-governed and wise appetite. 705

Comus. O foolishness of men ! that lend their ears
To those budge° doctors of the Stoic fur,
And fetch their precepts from the Cynic tub,°
Praising the lean and sallow Abstinence !
Wherefore did Nature pour her bounties forth 710
With such a full and unwithdrawing° hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks,
Thronging the seas with spawn innumerable,
But all to° please and sate the curious° taste ?
And set to work millions of spinning worms, 715
That in their green shops weave the smooth-haired silk,

To deck her sons ; and, that no corner might
Be vacant of her plenty, in her own loins
She hatched° the all-worshipped ore and precious gems,

To store her children with. If all the world 720
Should, in a pet of temperance, feed on pulse,° Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze,°
The All-giver would be unthanked, would be un-praised,
Not half his riches known, and yet despised ;

And we should serve him as a grudging master, 725
As a penurious niggard of his wealth,
And live like Nature's bastards, not her sons,
Who° would be quite surcharged with her own weight,
And strangled with her waste fertility :
The earth cumbered, and the winged air darked with plumes, 730
The herds would over-multitude their lords ;
The sea o'erfraught would swell, and the unsought diamonds
Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep,
And so bestud with stars, that they below
Would grow inured to light, and come at last 735
To gaze upon the sun with shameless brows.
List, Lady ; be not coy,° and be not cozened°
With that same vaunted name, Virginity.
Beauty° is Nature's coin ; must not be hoarded,
But must be current ; and the good thereof 740
Consists in mutual and partaken bliss,
Unsavoury in the enjoyment of itself.
If you let slip time, like a neglected rose
It withers on the stalk with languished head.
Beauty is Nature's brag,° and must be shown 745
In courts, at feasts, and high solemnities,

Where most may wonder at the workmanship.
It is for homely features to keep home ;
They had their name thence : coarse complexions
And cheeks of sorry grain° will serve to ply 750
The sampler,° and to tease° the huswife's wool.
What need a vermeil-tinctured lip for that,
Love-darting eyes, or tresses like the morn ?
There was another meaning in these gifts ;
Think what, and be advised ; you are but young
yet. 755

Lady. I had not thought to have unlocked my lips

In this unhallowed air, but that this juggler
Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,
Obtruding false rules pranked in reason's garb.
I hate when vice can bolt° her arguments 760
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride.
Impostor ! do not charge most innocent Nature;
As if she would her children should be riotous
With her abundance. She, good cateress,
Means her provision only to the good, 765
That live according to her sober laws,
And holy dictate of spare Temperance.
If every just man that now pines with want

Had but a moderate and beseeming share
Of that which lewdly-pampered Luxury 770
Now heaps upon some few with vast excess,
Nature's full blessings would be well-dispensed
In superfluous even proportion,
And she no whit encumbered with her store ;
And then the Giver would be better thanked, 775
His praise due paid : for swinish gluttony
Ne'er looks to Heaven amidst his gorgeous feast,
But with besotted base ingratitude
Crams, and blasphemes his Feeder. Shall I go on ?
Or have I said enow ? To him that dares 780
Arm his profane tongue with contemptuous words
Against the sun-clad power of chastity
Fain would I something say ; — yet to what end ?
Thou hast nor ear, nor soul, to apprehend
The sublime notion and high mystery 785
That must be uttered to unfold the sage
And serious doctrine of Virginity ;
And thou art worthy that thou shouldst not know
More happiness than this thy present lot.
Enjoy your dear wit, and gay rhetoric, 790
That hath so well been taught her dazzling fence ;°

Thou art not fit to hear thyself convinced.
Yet, should I try, the uncontrollèd worth
Of this pure cause would kindle my rapt spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence 795
That dumb things would be moved to sympathize,
And the brute Earth would lend her nerves, and shake,

Till all thy magic structures, reared so high,
Were shattered into heaps o'er thy false head.

Comus. She fables not. I feel that I do fear 800
Her words set off° by some superior power ;
And, though not mortal, yet a cold shuddering
dew

Dips me all o'er, as when the wrath of Jove°
Speaks thunder and the chains of Erebus°
To some of Saturn's crew.° I must dissemble, 805
And try her yet more strongly. — Come, no more !
This is mere moral babble, and direct
Against the canon laws° of our foundation.°
I must not suffer this ; yet 'tis but the lees°
And settlings of a melancholy blood. 810
But this will cure all straight ; one sip of this
Will bathe the drooping spirits in delight
Beyond the bliss of dreams. Be wise, and taste . . .

The BROTHERS rush in with swords drawn, wrest his glass out of his hand, and break it against the ground: his rout make sign of resistance, but are all driven in. The ATTENDANT SPIRIT comes in

Spir. What! have you let the false enchanter scape?

O ye mistook; ye should have snatched his wand, 815

And bound him fast. Without his rod reversed,°

And backward mutters of dissevering power,

We cannot free the Lady that sits here

In stony fetters fixed and motionless.

Yet stay: be not disturbed; now I bethink me 820

Some other means I have which may be used,

Which once of Melibœus° old I learnt,

The soothest° shepherd that e'er piped on plains.

There is a gentle Nymph not far from hence,

That with moist curb sways the smooth Severn° stream:

Sabrina° is her name: a virgin pure; 826

Whilom she was the daughter of Locrine,

That had the sceptre from his father Brute.

She, guiltless damsel, flying the mad pursuit

Of her enragèd stepdame, Guendolen, 830

Commended her fair innocence to the flood

That stayed her flight with his cross-flowing course.

The water-nymphs, that in the bottom played,
Held up their pearled wrists, and took her in,
Bearing her straight to aged Nereus'° hall ; 835
Who, piteous of her woes, reared her lank head,
And gave her to his daughters to imbathe
In nectared° lavers° strewed with asphodil,°
And through the porch and inlet of each sense Dropt in ambrosial° oils, till she revived, 840
And underwent a quick immortal change,
Made Goddess of the river. Still she retains
Her maiden gentleness, and oft at eve
Visits the herds along the twilight meadows,
Helping° all urchin° blasts, and ill-luck signs 845
That the shrewd meddling elf delights to make,
Which she with precious vialled liquors heals :
For which the shepherds, at their festivals,
Carol her goodness loud in rustic lays,
And throw sweet garland wreaths into her stream 850
Of pansies, pinks, and gaudy daffodils.
And, as the old swain° said, she can unlock
The clasping charm, and thaw the numbing spell,
If she be right invoked in warbled song ;

For maidenhood she loves, and will be swift 855
To aid a virgin, such as was herself,
In hard-besetting need. This will I try,
And add the power of some adjuring verse.

Song

Sabrina fair,
Listen where thou art sitting 860
Under the glassy, cool, translucent wave,
In twisted braids of lilies knitting
The loose train of thy amber-dropping° hair ;
Listen for dear honour's sake,
Goddess of the silver lake, 865
Listen and save !

Listen and appear to us,
In name of great Oceanus,°
By the earth-shaking Neptune's° mace,
And Tethys'° grave majestic pace ; 870
By hoary Nereus'° wrinkled look,
And the Carpathian° wizard's hook ;°
By scaly Triton's° winding shell,
And old soothsaying Glaucus'° spell ;
By Leucothea's° lovely hands,° 875

And her son that rules the strands;
 By Thetis'° tinsel-slippered feet,
 And the songs of Sirens sweet ;
 By dead Parthenope's° dear tomb,
 And fair Ligea's° golden comb, 880
 Wherewith she sits on diamond rocks
 Sleeking her soft alluring locks ;
 By all the nymphs that nightly dance
 Upon thy streams with wily glance ;
 Rise, rise, and heave thy rosy head 885
 From thy coral-paven bed,
 And bridle in thy headlong wave,
 Till thou our summons answered have.
Listen and save !

SABRINA rises, attended by Water-nymphs, and sings

By the rushy-fringèd bank, 890
 Where grows the willow and the osier° dank,°
 My sliding chariot stays,
 Thick set with agate, and the azurn° sheen
 Of turkis° blue, and emerald green,
 That in the channel strays :° 895
 Whilst from off the waters fleet
 Thus I set my printless feet

O'er the cowslip's velvet head,
That bends not as I tread.
Gentle swain, at thy request 900
I am here !

Spir. Goddess dear,
We implore thy powerful hand
To undo the charmèd band
Of true virgin here distressed 905
Through the force and through the wile
Of unblessed enchanter vile.

Sabr. Shepherd, 'tis my office best
To help ensnarèd chastity.
Brightest Lady, look on me. 910
Thus I sprinkle on thy breast
Drops that from my fountain pure
I have kept of precious cure ;
Thrice upon thy finger's tip,
Thrice upon thy rubied lip : 915
Next this marbled venomèd seat,
Smeared with gums of glutinous heat,°
I touch with chaste palms moist and cold.
Now the spell hath lost his hold ;
And I must haste ere morning hour 920
To wait in Amphitrite's bower.°

SABRINA descends, and the LADY rises out of her seat

Spir. Virgin, daughter of Locrine, Sprung of old Anchises' line,<sup>o</sup>
May thy brimmèd waves for this
Their full tribute never miss 925
From a thousand petty rills,
That tumble down the snowy hills :
Summer drouth or singèd air
Never scorch thy tresses<sup>o</sup> fair,
Nor wet October's torrent flood 930
Thy molten crystal fill with mud ;
May thy billows roll ashore
The beryl and the golden ore ;
May thy lofty head<sup>o</sup> be crowned
With many a tower and terrace round,<sup>o</sup> 935
And here and there thy banks upon<sup>o</sup>
With groves of myrrh and cinnamon.

Come, Lady ; while Heaven lends us grace,
Let us fly this cursed place,
Lest the sorcerer us entice 940
With some other new device.
Not a waste or needless sound
Till we come to holier ground.

I shall be your faithful guide
 Through this gloomy covert wide ; 945
 And not many furlongs thence
 Is your Father's residence,
 Where this night are met in state
 Many a friend to gratulate°
 His wished presence, and beside 950
 All the swains that there abide
 With jigs and rural dance resort.
 We shall catch them at their sport,
 And our sudden coming there
 Will double all their mirth and cheer. 955
 Come, let us haste ; the stars grow high,
 But Night sits monarch yet in the mid sky.

The Scene changes, presenting Ludlow Town, and the President's Castle: then come in Country Dancers; ° after them the ATTENDANT SPIRIT, with the two BROTHERS and THE LADY.

Song

Spir. Back, shepherds, back ! Enough your play
 Till next sun-shine holiday.
 Here be, without duck or nod, 960
 Other trippings to be trod

Of lighter toes, and such court guise
As Mercury<sup>o</sup> did first devise
With the mincing Dryades<sup>o</sup>
On the lawns and on the leas. 965

This second Song presents them to their Father and Mother

Noble Lord and Lady bright,
I have brought ye new delight.
Here behold so goodly grown
Three fair branches of your own.
Heaven hath timely tried their youth, 970
Their faith, their patience, and their truth,
And sent them here through hard assays<sup>o</sup>
With a crown of deathless praise,
To triumph in victorious dance
O'er sensual folly and intemperance. 975

The dances ended, the SPIRIT epiloguizes

Spir. To the ocean now I fly,
And those happy climes that lie
Where day never shuts his eye,
Up in the broad fields of the sky.
There I suck the liquid air,<sup>o</sup> 980
All amidst the gardens fair

Of Hesperus, ° and his daughters three
That sing about the golden tree.
Along the crispèd ° shades and bowers
Revels the spruce ° and jocund Spring ; 985
The Graces ° and the rosy-bosomed Hours °
Thither all their bounties bring.
There eternal Summer dwells,
And west winds with musky wing
About the cedarn ° alleys fling 990
Nard and cassia's ° balmy smells.
Iris ° there with humid bow
Waters the odorous banks, that blow
Flowers of more mingled hue
Than her purpled ° scarf can shew, 995
And drenches with Elysian ° dew
(List, mortals, if your ears be true)
Beds of hyacinth and roses,
Where young Adonis ° oft reposes,
Waxing well of his deep wound, ° 1000
In slumber soft, and on the ground
Sadly sits the Assyrian queen. °
But far above, in spangled sheen,
Celestial Cupid, her famed son, advanced,
Holds his dear Psyche, ° sweet entranced 1005

After her wandering labours long,
Till free consent the gods among
Make her his eternal bride,
And from her fair unspotted side
Two blissful twins<sup>o</sup> are to be born, 1010
Youth and Joy ; so Jove hath sworn.

But now my task is smoothly done ;
I can fly, or I can run
Quickly to the green earth's end,
Where the bowed welkin<sup>o</sup> slow doth bend, 1015
And from thence can soar as soon
To the corners of the moon.
Mortals, that would follow me,
Love Virtue ; she alone is free.
She can teach ye how to climb 1020
Higher than the sphery chime ;<sup>o</sup>
Or, if Virtue feeble were,
Heaven itself would stoop to her.<sup>o</sup>

LYCIDAS°

In this Monody° the Author bewails a learned Friend, unfortunately drowned in his passage from Chester on the Irish Seas, 1637; and, by occasion,° foretells the ruin of our corrupted Clergy, then in their height.

YET once more,° O ye laurels,° and once more,
Ye myrtles° brown,° with ivy° never sere,°
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forced fingers rude
Shatter° your leaves before the mellowing year.° 5
Bitter constraint and sad occasion dear°
Compels° me to disturb your season due;
For Lycidas is dead, dead ere his prime,
Young Lycidas, and hath not left his peer.°
Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew 10
Himself to° sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
He must not float upon his watery bier
Unwept, and welter° to the parching° wind,
Without the meed° of some melodious° tear.
Begin, then,° Sisters of the sacred well° 15
That from beneath the seat of Jove° doth spring;
Begin, and somewhat loudly sweep the string.
Hence with denial vain and coy° excuse:

So may some gentle Muse°
With lucky° words favour my destined urn, 20
And as he° passes turn,
And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud !

For we were nursed upon the self-same hill,°
Fed the same flock, by fountain, shade, and rill ;
Together both, ere the high lawns° appeared 25
Under the opening eyelids of the Morn,
We drove a-field, and both together heard
What time the grey-fly° winds her sultry horn,
Battening° our flocks with the fresh dews of night,
Oft till the star° that rose at evening bright 30
Toward heaven's descent had sloped his westering wheel.

Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute ;
Tempered to the oaten flute
Rough Satyrs° danced, and Fauns° with cloven heel
From the glad sound would not be absent long ; 35
And old Damœtus° loved to hear our song.

But, oh ! the heavy change, now thou art gone, °
Now thou art gone and never must return !
Thee, Shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding° vine o'ergrown, 40
And all their echoes, mourn.

The willows, and the hazel copses green,
Shall now no more be seen
Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lays.
As killing as the canker<sup>o</sup> to the rose, 45
Or taint-worm<sup>o</sup> to the weanling<sup>o</sup> herds that graze,
Or frost to flowers, that their gay wardrobe wear,
When first the white-thorn<sup>o</sup> blows ;
Such, Lycidas, thy loss to shepherd's ear.

Where were ye, Nymphs, when the remorseless deep 50
Closed o'er the head of your loved Lycidas ?
For neither were ye playing on the steep<sup>o</sup>
Where your old bards, the famous Druids,<sup>o</sup> lie, Nor on the shaggy top of Mona<sup>o</sup> high,
Nor yet where Deva<sup>o</sup> spreads her wizard<sup>o</sup> stream. 55
Ay me ! I fondly<sup>o</sup> dream "Had ye been there," . . . for what could that have done ?

What could the Muse herself that Orpheus<sup>o</sup> bore,
The Muse<sup>o</sup> herself, for her enchanting son,
Whom universal nature did lament, 60
When, by the rout<sup>o</sup> that made the hideous roar,
His gory visage down the stream was sent,
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore ?

Alas ! what boots it° with uncessant° care
To tend the homely, slighted, shepherd's trade,° 65
And strictly meditate° the thankless° Muse ?
Were it not better done, as others use,°
To sport with Amaryllis° in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Neæra's° hair ?°
Fame is the spur that the clear° spirit doth raise 70
(That last infirmity° of noble mind)
To scorn delights and live laborious days ;
But the fair guerdon° when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind Fury° with the abhorred shears, 75
And slits the thin-spun life. "But not the praise," Phœbus° replied, and touched my trembling ears :°
"Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glistening foil°
Set off to the world, nor in broad rumour lies, 80
But lives and spreads aloft by those pure eyes
And perfect witness of all-judging Jove ;°
As he pronounces lastly on each deed,
Of so much fame in heaven expect thy meed." /
O fountain Arethuse,° and thou honoured flood, 85
Smooth-sliding Mincius,° crowned with vocal reeds,
That strain° I heard was of a higher mood.°

But now my oat proceeds,
And listens to the Herald of the Sea,
That came in Neptune's plea.° 90
He asked the waves, and asked the felon° winds,
What hard mishap hath doomed this gentle swain?
And questioned every gust of rugged° wings
That blows from off each beaked promontory.
They knew not of his story ; 95
And sage Hippotades° their answer brings,
That not a blast was from his dungeon strayed,
The air was calm, and on the level brine
Sleek Panope° with all her sisters played.
It was that fatal and perfidious bark, 100
Built in the eclipse,° and rigged with curses dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.

Next, Camus,° reverend sire, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy,° and his bonnet sedge,°
Inwrought° with figures dim,° and on the edge 105
Like to that sanguine flower° inscribed with woe.
“Ah! who hath reft,” quoth he, “my dearest pledge?”°

Last came, and last did go,
The Pilot of the Galilean Lake ;°
Two massy keys° he bore of metals twain 110

(The golden opes, the iron° shuts amain).
He shook his mitred locks,° and stern bespake :° —
“How well could I have spared° for thee, young swain, Enow° of such as, for their bellies’ sake,
Creep, and intrude, and climb° into the fold !      115
Of other care they little reckoning make
Than how to scramble at the shearers’ feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest.°
Blind mouths !° that scarce themselves know how to hold
A sheep-hook, or have learnt aught else the least      120
That to the faithful herdman’s° art belongs !
What recks it them ?° What need they ? They are sped ;°
And, when they list,° their lean and flashy songs°
Grate on their scrannel° pipes of wretched straw ;
The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,      125
But, swoln with wind and the rank° mist they draw,°
Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread ;
Besides what the grim wolf° with privy paw°
Daily devours apace, and nothing said.
But that two-handed engine° at the door      130
Stands ready to smite once, and smite no more.”

Return, Alpheus ;° the dread voice° is past
That shrunk thy streams ;° return, Sicilian Muse,°
And call the vales, and bid them hither cast
Their bells and flowerets of a thousand hues. 135
Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use°
Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks,
On whose fresh lap the swart star° sparely° looks,
Throw hither all your quaint° enamelled° eyes,°
That on the green turf suck the honeyed showers, 140
And purple° all the ground with vernal flowers.
Bring the rathe° primrose that forsaken° dies,
The tufted crow-toe,° and pale jessamine,
The white pink, and the pansy freaked with jet,
The glowing violet, 145
The musk-rose, and the well-attired woodbine,
With cowslips wan that hang the pensive head,
And every flower that sad embroidery wears ;
Bid amaranthus° all his beauty shed,
And daffadillies fill their cups with tears, 150
To strew the laureate hearse° where Lycid lies.
For so, to interpose a little ease,
Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise.°
Ay me ! whilst thee the shores and sounding seas
Wash far away, where'er thy bones are hurled ; 155

Whether beyond the stormy Hebrides,°
Where thou perhaps under the whelming tide
Visit'st the bottom of the monstrous° world ;
Or whether thou, to our moist° vows denied,
Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old,° 160
Where the great Vision° of the guarded mount°
Looks towards Namancos and Bayona's hold.°
Look homeward, Angel, now, and melt with ruth :°
And, O ye dolphins,° waft the hapless youth.

Weep no more, woeful shepherds, weep no more, 165
For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead,
Sunk though he be beneath the watery floor.
So sinks the day-star° in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
And tricks° his beams, and with new-spangled ore° 170
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky :
So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high,
Through the dear might of Him° that walked the waves,
Where, other groves and other streams along,
With nectar° pure his oozy° locks he laves, 175
And hears the unexpressive° nuptial° song,
In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love.
There entertain him all the Saints above,

In solemn troops, and sweet societies,
That sing, and singing in their glory move, 180
And wipe the tears for ever from his eyes.
Now, Lycidas, the shepherds weep no more ;
Henceforth thou art the Genius<sup>o</sup> of the shore,
In thy large recompense, and shalt be good
To all that wander in that perilous flood. 185

Thus sang the uncouth<sup>o</sup> swain to the oaks and rills,
While the still morn went out with sandals grey :
He touched the tender stops<sup>o</sup> of various quills,<sup>o</sup>
With eager thought warbling his Doric<sup>o</sup> lay :
And now the sun had stretched out all the hills,<sup>o</sup> 190
And now was dropt into the western bay.
At last he rose, and twitched<sup>o</sup> his mantle blue :
To-morrow to fresh woods,<sup>o</sup> and pastures new.

ON HIS BLINDNESS°

WHEN I consider how my light is spent
Ere half my days° in this dark world and wide,
And that one talent° which is death to hide
Lodged with me useless, though my soul more bent
To serve there with my Maker, and present 5
My true account, lest He returning chide,
“Doth God exact day-labour, light denied?”
I fondly° ask. But Patience, to prevent
That murmur, soon replies, “God doth not need
Either man’s work or his own gifts. Who best 10
Bear his mild yoke, they serve him best. His state
Is kingly : thousands° at his bidding speed,
And post o’er land and ocean without rest ;
They also serve who only stand and wait.”

ON HIS DECEASED WIFE°

METHOUGHT° I saw° my late espoused saint
Brought to me like Alcestis° from the grave,
Whom Jove's great son to her glad husband gave, Rescued from Death by force, though pale and faint.

Mine, as whom washed from spot of childbed taint 5
Purification° in the Old Law did save,
And such as yet once more I trust to have Full sight of her in Heaven without restraint,
Came vested all in white, pure as her mind.

Her face was veiled ;° yet to my fancied sight 10
Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shined
So clear as in no face with more delight.

But, oh ! as to embrace me she inclined,
I waked, she fled, and day brought back my night.

NOTES

AT A SOLEMN MUSIC

TITLE. At a Solemn Music is synonymous with "At a Sacred Concert."

2. Sphere-born. Milton invented the genealogy. Cf. Comus, l. 241, where Echo is called "Daughter of the Sphere." Warton quotes Ben Jonson's amplification of the idea: —

"What charming peals are these? —
They are the MARRIAGE-RITES
Of two the choicest pair of man's delights,
Musick and Poesie:
French air and English verse here wedded lie."

6. concent. Harmony.

7. sapphire-coloured throne. Cf. Ezekiel, i. 26 and Revelation, v. 2.

18. noise. Music.

19. disproportioned sin. Cf. Paradise Lost, XI. ll. 55-57: —

"Sin that first
Distempered all things, and of incorrupt Corrupted."

20. chime. Harmony.

23. diapason. “The octave or interval which includes all the notes of the scale.” — MASSON.

27. consort. Society.

ON SHAKESPEARE

On Shakespeare was published in 1632 in the Second Folio Edition of Shakespeare's works, with the title, An Epitaph on the Admirable Dramatick Poet, W. Shakespeare. It was probably first “written on the blank leaf of a copy of the Folio Shakespeare of 1623, the only edition of Shakespeare's collected plays then in existence. The wording of the lines might almost suggest that there was some talk in the year 1630, as there has been so often since, of erecting a great national monument to Shakespeare, distinct from his local monument, in Stratford Church, and that Milton thought the project superfluous. Very probably, however, Milton had been reading the obituary verses to Shakespeare by Ben Jonson and Leonard Digges, prefixed to the First Folio, and only amplified in his own lines an idea already expressed in both those pieces.”<sup>1</sup>

It is interesting to compare with Milton's poem the two referred to by Professor Masson. Ben Jonson's is in part as follows: —

<sup>1</sup> Masson's Life of Milton, Vol. I. p. 236.

To the Memory of my Beloved Master, William Shakespeare

“Soul of the age !
The applause, delight, the wonder of our stage !
My Shakespeare, rise ! I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lie
A little further, to make thee a room :
Thou art a monument without a tomb,
And art alive still while thy book doth live
And we have wits to read and praise to give.”

Digges has much the same idea : —

“Shakespeare, at length thy pious fellows give
The world thy Works ; thy Works, by which outlive
Thy tomb thy name must : when that stone is rent
And Time dissolves thy Stratford Monument,
Here we alive shall view thee still. This Book
When brass and marble fade, shall make thee look Fresh to all ages.”

4. star-ypointing. Pointing to the stars. Milton seems to have coined the word. The prefix y (German ge) belongs correctly to the past passive participle.

8. livelong. The word is “lasting” in the Second Folio. — MASSON.

9. to the shame of slow-endeavouring art. The editors of the First Folio of Shakespeare say of him, “His mind and hand went together : and what he thought he uttered with that easiness that we have scarce received from him a blot on his papers." Milton himself worked slowly and repeatedly revised his first drafts.

11. unvalued. Invaluable.

12. Delphic. Oracular, inspired. A reference to the temple of Apollo at Delphi.

14. Dost make us marble with too much conceiving. "Dost turn us into marble by the over-effort of thought to which thou compellest us," — a very exact description of Shakespeare's effect on his readers." — MASSON. Shakespeare's readers are his monument.

L'ALLEGRO

TITLE. L'Allegro is Italian, meaning the cheerful man.

1. Melancholy. Derived from the Greek for "black bile," which was supposed to cause excessive gloom. Here pensiveness. Milton invented the genealogy. "Was it not poetical enough to think of melancholy as the child of Night and the Hell-dog?" — MASSON.

2. Cerberus. Pluto's sleepless three-headed dog which guarded the entrance to Hades.

3. Stygian. The Styx was one of the four rivers of Hades. The cave of Cerberus was on this river.

5. uncouth. The literal meaning is "unknown"; here "wild" or "lonely."

6. jealous. Alluding to the watch that fowls keep when they are sitting. — WARBURTON. — his. As the antecedent is Darkness, modern English would have its. Its had been coming into use since 1598, but in all Milton's poetry its occurs but three times. Masson's Life of Milton, Vol. VI. p. 641.

7. night-raven. The raven was a bird of ill-omen. Attention has repeatedly been called to the fact that it is not a night-bird; but see Much Ado, II. iii. 84: —

“I had as lief have heard the night-raven, come what plague could have come after it.”

10. Cimmerian. In the Odyssey, XI. 14, Homer describes the Cimmerians as dwelling in “eternal cloud and darkness.”

12. yclept. Called. Past participle of Anglo-Saxon cleopian, to call. — Euphrosyne. The three Graces were Euphrosyne, Aglaia, and Thalia. The account of their parentage in lines 14 to 16 was given in the fourth century by Servius in his note on Virgil's Æneid, I. 720.

14. Euphrosyne or Mirth is the daughter of the Goddess of Love and the God of Wine, or of the West Wind and the Dawn. Milton prefers the second.

17. sager. More wisely, or an adjective with the noun omitted with the meaning of “poets with greater wisdom.”

22. roses washed in dew. Cf. Taming of the Shrew, II. i. 174: —

“Morning roses newly wash'd with dew.”

24. buxom. First meant "pliant," "yielding," and later, as here, "brisk," "lively," "cheerful." Now it means "plump and comely." — debonair. "Courteous," "of good appearance." From de bon aire.

27. Quips. Sharp sayings. — Cranks. Odd or witty turns of expression. — wanton. Sportive, frolicsome.

29. Hebe. The goddess who preceded Ganymede as cupbearer of the gods.

33. trip it. It in this kind of construction is not much used in modern English except colloquially, but notice lord it, etc.

34. fantastic. Denoting that the dance is improvised according to the fancy.

39. To live with her. This passage is perfectly clear if to come in line 45 is regarded as coördinate with to live in line 39 and to hear in line 41. L'Allegro, awakened by the lark, comes to the window of his chamber and bids good-morrow to those on the outside. Then he views the scene in the farmyard.

40. unreproved. Not deserving reproof; innocent.

44. dappled. Spotted. Cf. Much Ado, V. iii: —

"The gentle day
Dapples the drowsy east with spots of gray."

45. in spite of sorrow. To spite sorrow.

48. eglantine. Eglantine is a name for the sweetbrier, which is not twisted. Probably Milton refers here to the common English woodbine or honeysuckle.

57. not unseen. "Happy men love witnesses of their joy."—HURD, quoted by Masson and others.

60. state. Stately advance or march.

62. dight. Arrayed.

67. tells his tale. Counts his sheep. But "under the hawthorn" suggests that the meaning of "story-telling" is possible.

69. Straight. Immediately. Cf. Richard III, I. iii. 355:—

"About your business straight."

And Longfellow, The Building of the Ship:—

"Build me straight, O worthy Master!
Staunch and strong, a goodly vessel."

70. landskip. Landscape, from Anglo-Saxon, land-scepe. The same suffix is used in friendship.

71. lawns. Meadows or pastures. — fallows. Fallow has lost entirely its original meaning of "pale-colored." Fallowland is ploughed, but allowed to go one year without a crop.

75. pied. Mottled with various colors.

78. Bosomed. Enclosed. Cf. "enbosomed."

80. cynosure. An object to which all eyes are turned. The word is Greek for "dog's tail." The last star in the tail of the Lesser Bear is the Pole Star by which Phœnician sailors guided their ships. Greek mariners steered by the Greater Bear. Cf. Comus, line 341 and note.

83-88. Corydon, Thyrsis, Phillis, Thestylis are type names of shepherds and shepherdesses in pastoral poetry.

91. secure. Untroubled; from sine cura.

92. upland. Inland, rural.

94. rebecks. Lute-shaped musical instruments, resembling a violin, having from one to three strings.

96. chequered shade. The sun shining through the leaves makes the ground beneath look like a checkerboard. Cf. Titus Andronicus, II. iii. 14-15:—

"The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind
And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground."

100. spicy. The spice is nutmeg, which is put in ale sweetened and warmed.

102. Mab. Cf. Ben Jonson's The Satyr:—

"This is Mab, the mistress Fairy,
That doth nightly rob the dairy,
She that pinches country wenches."

Cf. also Romeo and Juliet, I. iv. 53-95, and the first pages of Shelley's Queen Mab. — junkets. Any sweetmeat, but originally cream cheese served on rushes, the Italian name of which is giunco. — eat. Preterit, but riming with feat.

103. She. A shepherdess pinched for neglecting her work. Cf. Merry Wives of Windsor, V. v. 96-103.

104. he. One of the shepherds. Friar's lantern. The ignis fatuus, called popularly Jack o'Lantern, Will-o'-the-Wisp, etc., the field spirit supposed to mislead people at night, — a light seen over marshy places, probably caused by the burning of a highly inflammable gas.

105. Tells. He may be understood as the subject. This shepherd tells how the drudging goblin, Robin Goodfellow, toiled. Cf. Ben Jonson's Love Restored: "I am the honest plain country spirit, and harmless; Robin Goodfellow, he that sweeps the hearth and the house clean, and riddles [passes the embers through a sieve] for the country maids, and does all their other drudgery."

111. chimney. Fireplace.

113. crop. Stomach.

117. Towered cities. Some editors think that this and what follows describes the evening reading of L'Allegro. But it may well represent experiences in the city. The poem deals with "a series of typical experiences."

120. weeds. Clothing; still used in widow's weeds. — triumphs. Shows, spectacles. Cf. Bacon's Of Masques and Triumphs.

121. store of. Many.

122. Rain influence. According to the astrologers, the stars influenced men for good or evil. Here the ladies' eyes are the stars. — judge the prize. In contests in the writing of poetry and in tournaments ladies awarded the prizes.

124. her. The lady who presided at the contest.

125. Hymen. The God of Marriage appears in many masques.

126. saffron. The customary color of Hymen's robe. Cf. Ben Jonson's Hymenaei : —

"On the other hand, entered Hymen in a saffron-colour'd robe."

132. learned sock. Milton here draws the distinction which is often made between the learning of Ben Jonson, which was correct and profound, and the fancy-free spontaneity of Shakespeare. — sock. A low-heeled shoe worn by actors in comedies. That, as some have thought, Milton here praises Shakespeare so faintly as to show lack of appreciation, seems far-fetched. Cf. the lines On Shakespeare (pp. 2-3).

135-150. Note the music of the lines.

136. Lydian airs. Lydian was the third of the three kinds or modes of ancient music. The Dorian was stately; the Phrygian lively; the Lydian soft and voluptuous.

138. soul. Object of pierce.

139. bout. A turn in music, a passage.

145. Orpheus. Orpheus, the son of Apollo and the Muse Calliope, became, according to the myth, the most famous of musicians. When his wife Eurydice died by the bite of a serpent, he went to the Lower World to seek her. Playing his own accompaniment on the lyre, he sang before Pluto his petition for the restoration of his wife. Pluto granted his request on condition that he should not look back at his wife who was to follow him. But when he reached the verge of light, he looked back to make sure that she was following. She had to return to Hades. Because of his grief at the loss of his wife he treated with contempt the Thracian maidens, and by them was torn in pieces. Cf. Classical Dictionary.

147. Elysian. Of Elysium, the abode of the shades of the Blessed.

151-152. Mirth. Cf. Christopher Marlowe in The Passionate Shepherd to His Love : —

“If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me, and be my love.”

Read also The Nymph's Reply, attributed by some to Sir Walter Raleigh.

IL PENSEROSO

TITLE. Il Penseroso is good Italian of the seventeenth century, with the meaning of pensive or meditative. For a contrary, but wrong, opinion see Pattison's Life of Milton, p. 22.

3. bested. The same word as bestead, assist, help.

4. fixed . . . toys. The mind intent on things of high import, not on trifles.

6. fond. Derived from the past participle of Anglo-Saxon fonnen, to be foolish; used here in the original meaning. — possess. Transitive with the object fancies.

9. likest. An old superlative of like. The foolish fancies are most similar to dreams.

10. pensioners. Retinue. Queen Elizabeth established a guard called pensioners.

12. Melancholy. Pensiveness.

14. hit. Meet, agree with. Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, II. ii: —

“From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adjacent wharfs.”

And Pericles, III. ii: —

“Delicate odours as ever hit my nostril.”

18. Memnon. A king of the Ethiopians, who toward the end of the Trojan War fought for Priam, and was killed by Achilles; he was noted for his beauty. Cf. Odyssey, XI. 552. On the beauty of Memnon's sister Milton seems to be the only authority.

19. starred Ethiop queen. Cassiopeia, wife of the Ethiopian king, Cepheus, boasted that she or, according to another version of the story, her daughter, Andromeda, was more beautiful than the sea-nymphs. Indignant, they sent a sea-monster to ravage the coast. Directed by an oracle, Cepheus exposed the daughter to be devoured by the monster; and she was rescued by Perseus. After death Cassiopeia and her daughter became constellations. The sea-nymphs, however, had Cassiopeia placed near the pole where half the night she is held with her head downward.

23. Vesta. The goddess of the hearth. Milton invented the genealogy. It is peculiarly in harmony with the rest of the poem to represent Melancholy as the child of the Goddess of the domestic hearth and Saturn, the introducer of civilization. For the story of Saturn see the Classical Dictionary. Read also the first lines of Keats's Hyperion.

29. Ida. A mountain in Crete where Jove overthrew Saturn. Cf. Paradise Lost, I. 515.

33. grain. Originally meant "a small round particle"; then "seed" as a grain of wheat; finally specialized as the name of the coccus, an insect from which cochineal dye is made. Hence it means here color; "darkest grain" means dark purple.

35. stole. Strictly a narrow band fringed at the ends and worn over both shoulders by priests, etc. Now loosely used of any ecclesiastical vestment. cypress lawn. "Black linen crepe or gauze, said to have first come from the island of Cyprus." — MASSON.

37. state. Stately dignity.

39. commercing. Communing.

40. rapt. Transported.

42. Forget thyself to marble. Cf. On Shakespeare, l. 14 and note.

43. sad. Serious. — leaden. The color peculiar to the star Saturn, betokening melancholy. — cast. Gaze.

46. Spare Fast. Temperance in diet was a favorite doctrine of Milton's.

51-54. Cherub contemplation. Cf. Ezekiel, x. To one of the cherubs of Ezekiel's vision Milton gives the name Contemplation. "It was by the serene faculty named Contemplation that one attained the clearest notion of divine things." — MASSON.

52. yon. Yonder.

55. Hist may be considered an imperative; and the lines may be read: "Keep silence unless the nightingale will sing." Some editors call hist the past participle with the meaning hushed, and construe silence as the object of bring in line 51.

56. Philomel. Philomela, daughter of King Pandion of Attica, was turned into a nightingale because of her part in the murder of Itys.

57. plight. Mood.

59. Cynthia. Diana was born on Cyntheus, a mountain of Delos; hence the name Cynthia. — checks. The Moon, entranced by the song of the nightingale, checks her team that she may listen. — dragon yoke. Keightley pointed out that in ancient mythology the car of Ceres, not that of Diana, is drawn by dragons. As proof that Milton had authority for the idea see Midsummer Night's Dream, III. ii. 379; and Cymbeline, II. ii. 48.

61. Sweet bird. As indications of Milton's liking for the nightingale, cf. Sonnet to the Nightingale; Comus, 234 and 566; Paradise Lost, IV. 602, 771; VII. 435; Paradise Regained, IV. 245. — MASSON.

65. unseen. Cf. L' Allegro, 57 and note. The pensive man loves solitude.

73. plat. Plot.

74. curfew. The curfew-bell, announcing the time for covering fires, usually eight or nine in the evening.

75. some. "A distinct intimation, if such were at all necessary, that the whole visual circumstance is ideal, — that the Penseroso of the poem is not actually out walking in any particular locality, but is imagining himself, in reverie, here, there, and everywhere, at the bidding of his mood." — MASSON.

78. removèd. Remote.

83. bellman. Night watchman. — charm. From car-men, "song," originally with the idea of incantation. Cf. Herriek's The Bellman : —

"From noise of scare-fires rest ye free,
From murders benedicite;
From all mischances that may fright
Your pleasing slumbers in the night,

Mercie secure ye all, and keep
The goblin from ye while ye sleep.
Past one aclock, and almost two;
My masters all, good day to you."

87. outwatch the Bear. As the Bear never sets, this implies studying all night.

88. thrice-great Hermes. The Greeks gave to the Egyptian philosopher Thot the name Hermes Trismegistus (thrice great), confusing him with Mercury. Most of the books attributed to him were written by the Neo-Platonists of Alexandria in the fourth century A.D.

88-89. unsphere . . . Plato. Bring back the spirit of Plato from the unseen world where it now is; that is, study Plato's Phædo. Cf. Arcades, line 63 and note.

91. forsook. Forsaken.

93. And. After and supply tell. The figure is known as zeugma.

94. fire, air, flood. Refers to the mediæval belief that fire, air, water, and earth were the four elements composing the material universe.

98. sceptred. Tragedy is concerned mostly with the misfortunes of kings. — pall. From Latin palla, a mantle. Worn by actors in classic tragedies.

99. Thebes, etc. Here Milton alludes to the three chief themes of Greek tragedy.

101-102. Some editors find here a reference to Shakespeare only; the lines seem rather to indicate Milton's undervaluation of contemporary drama.

102. buskined. The buskin was a high shoe or half-boot worn by the tragic actor. Cf. L' Allegro, line 132 and note.

104. Musæus. A semi-mythical person represented as one of the earliest Greek poets.

105. Orpheus. Cf. L' Allegro, line 145 and note.

109-115. him that left half-told. Chaucer, who left the Squire's Tale unfinished.

110. Cambuscan. This, which seems to be a corrupted form of Genghis Khan, is accented by Chaucer on the last syllable. Cambuscan had by his wife, Elpheta, two sons, Algarsife and Camball, and a daughter, Canace. The King of Arabia and India sent to Cambuscan a steed of brass, which, directed by a pin in its ear, could travel any distance in twenty-four hours, and a sword which could cut through any armor and make a wound that could not be healed unless it were stroked by the back of the sword. Canace received a mirror in which she could read the future, and a ring by virtue of which she could understand the language of birds and the medicinal value of every plant. The tale ends when Canace has heard the story of a love-sick hawk. It is not known whose wife Canace became. The story was completed by Spenser in The Faerie Queene, IV. 2-3.

113. virtuous. Possessing virtue or power. Cf. Mark, v. 30: "And Jesus, immediately knowing in himself that virtue had gone out of him, turned him about in the press, and said, Who touched my clothes?"

116-120. This applies closely to Spenser and The Faerie Queene; Milton may, however, have had in mind also Ariosto, Tasso, and Boiardo.

122. civil-suited. Dressed in the clothing of a citizen.

124. Attic boy. Cephalus, with whom, according to one story, Eos (Aurora) fell in love, and whom she carried away. According to another story, he rejected her advances, but as a result of the affair killed by accident his wife who was watching him while he hunted. Cf. Classical Dictionary.

128. his. In modern English its.

130. minute-drops. The drops fall at intervals of a minute.

134. brown. Dark. — Sylvan. The woodland god, Sylvanus, by some identified with Pan.

135. monumental. Memorial.

141. garish. Staring.

145. consort. Possibly in the sense of "concert"; or in that of "society." Cf. At a Solemn Music, line 27 and note. "Consort" was usual at the time in the sense of "partner."

147-150. These lines are obscure; Professor Masson's paraphrase of them is as clear as any: " ' Let some strange, mysterious dream wave (i.e. move to and fro) at his (i.e. Sleep's) wings, in airy stream,' etc."

154. Genius. Guardian spirit.

155. due. Proper. The cloister is the proper place for the meditative man to walk. Cf. Lycidas, 7, and Comus, 12.

156. studious cloister's pale. Milton was probably thinking of part of some college, roofed to keep out the rain, and having open pillared sides.

158. massy-proof. The pillars are strong enough to support the massive roof.

159. storied windows. Windows of stained glass, representing subjects from Scripture history. — dight. Adorned.

170. spell. Find out the meaning of.

ARCADES

4. mistook. The use of the past tense for the past participle is common in Elizabethan English.

8. Fame, etc. An allusion to the compliments paid to the Countess of Derby by Spenser in his Teares of the Muses and in Colin Clouts Come Home Again.

14. state. Stateliness, dignity.

20. Latona. Latona, also called Leto, and Jupiter were the parents of Apollo and Diana.

21. towered Cybele. Cybele, called by the Greeks Rhea and Ops, was the wife of Saturn (Cronos), and the mother of Vesta, Ceres, Juno, Pluto, Neptune, and Jupiter. In works of art she wears a crown, from which towers rise on the forehead; hence "towered."

23. Juno . . . odds. Juno could not give her any allowance as a handicap in a contest in beauty. Masson sees here an "implied compliment, that even the handsomest of her daughters could hardly keep up with her."

STAGE DIRECTIONS. Genius of the Wood. "It is a fair surmise that the Genius of the Wood was personated by Henry Lawes." — MASSON.

26. gentle. Though the actors are disguised, he perceives that they are of the nobility.

28. Arcady. Arcadia, a mountainous part of Greece.

30-31. Alpheus . . . Arethuse. The river Alpheus, which rises in Arcadia, during part of its course flows underground. This peculiarity gave rise to the myth of the river-god Alpheus and the nymph Arethusa. She, pursued by Alpheus, who had fallen in love with her, was changed by Diana into a fountain, called Arethusa, on the island of Ortygia, in the harbor of Syracuse. Alpheus, transformed into a river, followed her under the sea to Ortygia, and mingled there with the waters of the fountain. Cf. Lycidas, lines 85 and 132.

33. silver-buskined Nymphs. The ladies of the masque wore buskins. Cf. Il Penseroso, 102. Nymphs is an allusion to Diana and her nymphs, whom Virgil represents as wearing buskins.

34. quest. Inquiry, search. — free. Noble.

46. curl. Dress with curls.

51. Note the alliteration in lines 47, 50, and 51. — thwarting. Going crosswise or obliquely; zigzag.

52. cross dire-looking planet. Saturn. Cf. H Penseroso, 43 and note.

53. worm. Any small creeping animal.

57. tasselled. Decorated with tassels.

60. puissant. Potent. — murmurs. Murmured blessings. Cf. Comus, 526 and note.

63. celestial Sirens' harmony. According to the Ptolemaic astronomical system, which Milton used in his poetry, the earth was the fixed centre of the universe. Enclosing the earth at different distances were ten spheres. The tenth contained all the others, and protected them from Chaos. On each of the nine infolded spheres Milton seats a Siren. The nine Sirens sang in harmony, and keeping time to the music the three Fates, Lachesis, Clotho, and Atropos, turned the spindle of Necessity, "on which the fate of gods and men is wound."

72-73. none can hear, etc. "So in Shakespeare's well-known speech of Lorenzo to Jessica on the same music of the spheres (Merchant of Venice, V. i) : —

“ ‘ But, whilst this muddy vesture of decay Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it.’ ”

— MASSON.

81. state. Chair of state, throne.

97. Ladon's. Ladon was a river in Arcady.

98. Lycæus. A lofty mountain in Arcadia on which Zeus was worshipped. — Cylene. A mountain on the frontier of Arcadia.

100. Erymanth. Erymanthus, a river in Arcadia ; here the god of the river.

102. Mænalus. Another Arcadian mountain. Cf. Theocritus, Idyl I. : “ ‘ O Pan, Pan ! whether thou art on the high hills of Lycæus, or rangest mighty Maenalus, haste hither to the Sicilian isle.’ ” — LANG'S Translation.

106. Syrinx. An Arcadian nymph, who, when pursued by Pan, was in answer to her prayer changed into a reed, of which Pan made his pipe. Cf. Ben Jonson's Satyr : —

“ And the dame hath Syrinx grace !
O that Pan were now in place —
Sure they are of heavenly race.”

COMUS

In none of the editions of the masque published during the life of Milton is it called Comus. It was first published in 1637 by Lawes with this title-page : —

“ A Maske presented at Ludlow Castle 1634, on Michaelmas Night, before the Right Honourable John, Earl of Bridgewater, Viscount Brackley, Lord President of Wales, and one of His Majesties’ Most Honourable Privy Counsell. ‘Eheu quid volui misero mihi! floribus Austrum Perditus!’ ”

“ London; Printed for Humphrey Robinson, at the signe of the Three Pidgeons in Paul’s Churchyard, 1637.”

The Latin motto Professor Masson has translated as follows: “ Alas! what have I chosen for my wretched self; thus on my flowers, infatuated that I am, letting in the rude wind? ” He thinks that it indicates the fears with which Milton consented to the publication of the masque. But they turned out to be groundless. Milton published it himself in 1645, and again in 1673, with titles similar to that in Lawes’s edition. A briefer and more convenient title being necessary, the masque is now named after its principal character.

Masques generally begin with a prologue which expounds the central idea and the occasion — a kind of preliminary exposition. This is supposed to have been the first literary part in the development of the masque.

2. those. Has the idea of “ well known.”

3. insphered. Cf. Il Penseroso, line 88, and Arcades, 63, and notes.

4. serene. Where does the accent fall?

7. pestered. Cumbered, clogged, as a horse hobbled in a pasture. — pinfold. An enclosure for stray animals, a pound.

10. this mortal change. “This mortal state of life.”—MASSON. Is it not rather an echo of 1 Corinthians, xv. 53?

11. gods. Saints in heaven.

12. due. Cf. Il Penseroso, line 155 and note.

13. golden key. Cf. Lycidas, line 111.

16. ambrosial weeds. Heavenly garments. Ambrosia was the food of the gods. Cf. L' Allegro, line 120 and note.

17. mould. Earth.

18-20. When Jupiter and his brothers distributed by lot among themselves the government of the universe, Neptune obtained the sea; Pluto (called the underground or Stygian Jupiter) the lower regions; and Jupiter the heavens. Hence “high and nether Jove” means Jupiter and Pluto.

23. unadorned. Equivalent to “otherwise unadorned.”

25. several. Each island to a separate government.

27. this Isle. Great Britain.

29. quarters. Divides among. — blue-haired. In masques blue is the usual color of the hair of sea-nymphs. Ben Jonson says of the six tritons in The Masque of Blackness, “Their hairs were blue as partaking of the sea-colour.”

30. this tract. Wales.

31. Peer. The Earl of Bridgewater. — mickle. Much.

33. old and haughty. A compliment to the Welsh. Note the compliments in Comus, — a masque characteristic.

35. state. Ceremony of installation, or dignity and high station.

37. perplexed. Entangled.

38. horror. From the Latin horrere, to be rough, bristle.

45. hall or bower. In the banqueting hall or in the lady's boudoir.

48. After the Tuscan mariners transformed. A Latin construction, equivalent to "After the transformation of the Tuscan mariners." The Tyrrhenian pirates, whose ship Bacchus had hired, were planning to sell him as a slave. He changed the mast and oars into serpents and himself into a lion. The pirates, becoming mad with fright, leaped into the sea and were transformed into dolphins.

49. Tyrrhene shore. The shore of the west central part of Italy. — listed. Pleased. Cf. St. John, iii. 8.

50. Circe. Cf. Odyssey, X.

56. a son. Milton invented this account of the parentage of Comus as well as that of his character.

58. Comus. Derived from a Greek word for a "band of revellers," a "jovial troup." Personified as the god of festive mirth, Comus appears first in the later classical mythology.

59. ripe. Mature. — frolic . . . age. Rejoicing in his strength.

60. Celtic and Iberian fields. France and Spain.

65. orient. Richly bright with a suggestion of mystery.

66. drouth of Phœbus. Thirst due to Phœbus, the sun-god.

67. fond. Foolish. Cf. Il Penseroso, line 6 and note.

69. resemblance. Cf. Genesis, i. 26-27.

71. ounce. A kind of leopard.

72-77. In Homer's account of Circe her victims retained their intellects unchanged.

79. adventurous. Containing dangers that afford opportunity for adventures.

83. Iris' woof. Iris was goddess of the rainbow. The meaning may be that Comus's clothing was the color of the rainbow. Cf. Paradise Lost, XI. 244: —

"Iris had dipped the woof."

87. knows to. A Latin construction equivalent to "knows how to." Cf. Lycidas, lines 10-11.

88. less faith. "Not less trustworthy than he is skilful in music." — MASSON.

STAGE DIRECTIONS. Comus with his rabble (rout) forms a rudimentary antimasque.

91. Aid of this occasion. Supposed to be a compliment to Henry Lawes, who acted the part.

93-144. Lyrical passages abound in the masques that precede Comus.

93. The star. Hesperus, the evening star, which tells the shepherd when to put his flock in the fold for the night. Cf. Measure for Measure, IV. ii. 248:—

“Look, the unfolding star calls up the shepherd.”

96-97. axle . . . stream. The ancients thought of the Atlantic as a stream flowing around the earth. The waters hissed when the setting sun sank into them. — steep. The sea seems to rise steeply from the shore.

98. slope. Sloped, i.e. having passed below the horizon.

99. dusky. Becoming dark.

100-101. Cf. Psalms, xix. 5.

105. rosy twine. Wreaths of roses.

110. saws. Wise sayings, maxims. Cf. As You Like It, II. vii. 156.

112. starry quire. Quire is an old spelling of choir.

113. spheres. This and starry in line 112 refer to the idea that the spheres composing the universe made music as they revolved. Cf. Arcades, line 63 and note.

116. morrice. A Moorish dance.

118. pert. Sprightly (with none of the modern sense of "impertinence"). — dapper. Dainty, spruce.

121. wakes. Night watches.

129. Cotytto. A Thracian divinity, whose rites were celebrated at night in a licentious manner.

131. called. Addressed in prayer, invoked. — dragon womb. Cf. Il Penseroso, line 59 and note.

132. spets. Spits.

135. Hecate. The goddess of witchcraft. Cf. Macbeth, II. i. and Middleton's The Witch, III. iii.

139. nice. "Foolishly particular about trifles." "Blabbing" in the preceding line shows that "nice" is a sneer. — Indian. Eastern.

140. cabined loop-hole. "The loop-hole of her cabin."

144. fantastic. Cf. L'Allegro, line 34 and note.—round. A kind of country dance.

STAGE DIRECTION. The Measure denotes any dance with a clearly marked rhythm.

145. Different pace. Note the change in metre.

147. shrouds. Hiding-places. — brakes. Bushes, brush-wood.

151. trains. Allurements, decoys.

153-154. I hurl, etc. "Imagine the actor who personated Comus flinging from his hand, or making a gesture of flinging, a magical powder, with the result, by some stage-device, of a flash of coloured light." — MASSON. — spongy air. Air like a sponge to hold the spells.

155. blear illusion. Illusions that blur or make dim.

156. presentments. Representations. Cf. Hamlet, III.
iv. 53-54: —

"Look here, upon this picture, and on this,
The counterfeit presentment of two brothers."

157. quaint. Odd. — habits. Cf. "riding habits."

161. glozing. Deceiving.

163. Wind me. Insinuate myself into his confidence.

165. virtue. Cf. Il Penseroso, line 113 and note.

167. gear. Business.

168. fairly. Quietly. Cf. Much Ado, V. iv. 72.

174. loose. In manners or in morals.

175. granges. Granaries.

176. Pan. The great god of flocks and shepherds.

178. swilled insolence. Insolence due to swilling, or drinking greedily.

179. Wassailers. Revelers. Wassail is from waes hael, be hale, a phrase used in drinking bouts. Cf. Hamlet,
I. iv. 9.

189. sad. Sober, serious. — votarist. One who is devoted or consecrated by a religious vow. — palmer. "Originally one who had made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land and brought back a palm-branch as a token." — SKEAT.

190. Phœbus' wain. The wagon of the sun-god.

193. engaged. Entangled.

195. stole. Cf. Arcades, line 4 and note.

203. rife. Prevalent. — perfect. Perfectly distinct.

204. single. Complete.

210. well. In prose the adverb would precede the verb.

212. strong siding. Taking sides vigorously.

215. Chastity. The Biblical trio is Faith, Hope, and Charity. The central idea of Comus is the power of chastity.

219. glistening. Glittering. Cf. Merchant of Venice, II. vii. 65.

225. casts. Construe as coördinate with does in line 223.

230. Echo. Echo, having deceived Juno, was deprived of all speech except the ability to answer questions. Then Echo fell in love with Narcissus; and, her love being unrequited, she pined away until nothing remained of her but her voice.

231. airy shell. The air.

232. Meander. A river in Asia Minor, full of windings. — margent. Margin.

237. Narcissus. Fell in love with his own reflection in the water of a fountain. Without eating he stayed by the fountain till he died. His corpse was changed into the flower that bears his name.

241. Parley. Conversation. — Daughter of the Sphere. Cf. At a Solemn Music, line 2. Some critics interpret the phrase to mean that Echo is the daughter of the music of the spheres; others that the sphere of line 241 is the "airy shell" of 231.

243. Give resounding grace. Increase the beauty of the harmonies by echoing them.

247. vocal. Carrying the voice.

248. his. The antecedent is "something holy."

251. fall. Cadence, a sinking of tone or decrease of volume of sound.

253. Sirens. Sea-nymphs who lived on an island near Sicily and by their songs lured sailors to destruction. Browne, in the Inner Temple Masque, written in 1614, brings them and Comus together. Cf. Homer's Odyssey, XII. 67 ff. : —

"They sit amidst a mead,
And round about it runs a hedge or wall
Of dead men's bones, their wither'd skins and all
Hung all along upon it; and these men
Were such as they had fawn'd into their fen,
And then their skins hung on their hedge of bones."

— CHAPMAN'S Translation.

254. flowery-kirtled. With clothing adorned with flowers. — Naiades. Nymphs of fresh water.

257. Elysium. Cf. L'Allegro, line 147 and note. — Scylla. A monster which lived in a cave and had a bark like a dog. (Cf. line 258.) Opposite Scylla lived Charybdis (line 259). Cf. Odyssey, XII. 73 ff. Later the two were localized in the Gulf of Messina, Scylla as a rock on the Italian side, and Charybdis as a whirlpool on the Sicilian side.

262. home-felt. Felt keenly.

267. Unless. Supply "thou be."

268. Pan. Cf. line 176. — Sylvan. Cf. Il Penseroso, line 134 and note.

271. ill is lost. A Latinism, seemingly a translation of male perditur.

273. extreme shift. Last resource.

279-290. These lines imitate in form the dialogue of Greek tragedy.

285. forestalling. Coming sooner than they expected it.

286. hit. Guess.

287. Imports their loss. Does the loss of them mean much to you?

290. Hebe. The goddess of youth. Cf. L'Allegro, line 29 and note.

291. what time. When. Cf. Lycidas, line 28 and note.
—laboured. Tired with work.

293. swinked. Tired. From the Anglo-Saxon swincan, to labor.

297. port. Bearing.

299. element. Air or sky.

301. plighted. Folded. From the Latin plicare;
plight, “dangerous condition,” is a Teutonic word. — awe-strook. Awe-struck.

312. dingle. A narrow valley. — dell. A dell as distinguished from a dingle is between lower hills.

313. bosky bourn. Wooded stream.

315. attendance. Attendants.

316. shroud. Sheltered. Cf. line 147 and note.

317. low-roosted. The lark builds its nest on the ground.

318. thatched pallet. Thatch, the usual meaning of which is “cover,” is probably used here of the lining of the nest. — pallet. Bed. — rouse. Rise.

325. courts. Courtesy is derived from court.

327. less warranted. The idea is iterated in “less secure.”

329. square. Proportion or adjust.

332. benison. Blessing.

334. disinherit. Dispossess.

338. rush-candle. A candle the wick of which is the pith of a rush. — wicker hole. Window made of platted twigs.

340. rule. The light streams straight as a line drawn with a rule.

341. star of Arcady. Callisto, an Arcadian nymph, was changed into a bear and later placed by Jupiter in the heavens as the constellation of the Greater Bear. Her son Arcas became the constellation of the Little Bear, in which is the polar star.

342. Tyrian. The sailors of Tyre in Phœnicia sailed by the polar star. The Greeks sailed by the Greater Bear. — Cynosure. Cf. L'Allegro, line 80 and note.

344. wattled cotes. Sheepfolds made of interwoven twigs. Cf. Paradise Lost, IV. 185 ff.

345. stops. Small holes in wind instruments such as the flute.

349. innumerable. Innumerable.

355. Leans. The subject is "head."

356. If. After "if" supply "she be."

358. hunger . . . heat. The hunger of savage beasts or the lust of savage men.

359-360. over-exquisite . . . evils. Excessively careful or curious to foretell the form of evils.

366. to seek. Unprepared. Cf. Paradise Lost, VIII. 197:—

“Unpractised, unprepared, and still to seek.”

367. unprincipled. Untrained, ignorant of the principles.

372. plight. Condition. Cf. line 301.

376. seeks to. Resorts to.

380. to-ruffled. Entirely ruffled. To is an intensive particle with the idea of “in pieces,” “asunder.”

382. centre. The centre of the earth.

386. affects. Likes.

390. weeds. Cf. L'Allegro, line 120 and note.

391. beads. Rosary. From Anglo-Saxon bede prayer. The name was transferred to little balls on which the prayers were counted.

393. Hesperian tree. This tree bore the golden apples presented by Gæa to Hera at her marriage to Zeus. They were guarded by the daughters of Hesperus, aided by a dragon, Ladon. Hercules, as one of his labors, slew the dragon and got possession of the apples. Cf. lines 982-983.

395. unenchantèd. That cannot be enchanted.

398. unsunnèd. Hidden from the light of the sun.

401. wink on. Seem not to see, close the eyes to.

404. it recks me not. I care not.

407. unowned. Unprotected.

408. infer. Argue.

413. squint. Looking askance.

419. if. Equivalent to "even if."

423. trace. traverse. — unharboured. Without places of safety.

426. bandite. Bandit.

429. horrid. Cf. line 38 and note.

430. unblenched. Not blanched or made white through fear.

435. curfew. Cf. Il Penseroso, line 74 and note. Ghosts were reputed to wander abroad from curfew to cock-crow.

436. mine. "Mines were supposed to be inhabited by various sorts of spirits." — WARTON.

443. brinded. Brindled, streaked.

447. Gorgon. The heads of the three Gorgons were covered with hissing serpents. Medusa, the only mortal one of the three, was killed by Perseus, and her head was placed in the centre of Minerva's shield. It still retained, however, the power of changing to stone whoever looked at it.

455. lackey. Become servants to.

459. oft converse. Frequent communion.

463-475. Various editors following Warton note that these lines are a paraphrase of a passage in the Phædo of Plato.

468. Imbodies, and imbrutes. Incorporates with itself the lusts of the flesh and becomes brutish.

471. charnel. Sepulchral.

473. it. The antecedent must be one of the shadows.

474. sensuality. Sensuality.

476-479. "A compliment to Plato who has just been quoted." — MASSON.

479. nectared. Nectar was the drink of the gods.

491. iron stakes. Their swords. Cf. line 487.

494. Thyrsis. Cf. L' Allegro, line 83 and note.

494-497. A compliment to Lawes, who acted the part.

495. madrigal. A shepherd's song.

495-512. Note the rimed couplets.

501. next. Nearest.

502. toy. Trifle.

506. To. With the meaning "compared to."

508. how chance. How does it happen?

509. sadly. Seriously.

515. sage poets. Some critics suppose that Milton referred to Homer and Virgil.

517. Chimeras. Homer and Virgil sang of one particular Chimera. The forepart of its body was that of a lion; the middle that of a goat; the hind part that of a dragon. It breathed fire. It was killed by Bellerophon mounted on the winged horse Pegasus.

520. navel. Centre.

526. murmurs. Murmured incantations.

529. unmoulding. The participle modifies poison (line 524) and takes the object mintage. Destroying the form of reason stamped on the face.

531. crofts. Small fields. Cf. Browning's A Grammarian's Funeral: —

“Sleep, flock and herd! sleep, darkling thorpe and croft.”

532. brow. Overhang.

534. stabled wolves. Wolves in their dens.

535. Hecate. Cf. line 135.

539. unweeting. Unknowing.

540. then. The time that.

542. besprent. Sprinkled.

547. meditate. Practise.

548. ere a close. Before the end of the song.

552. unusual stop. An allusion to line 145.

553. drowsy-flighted. "Drowsily-flying." — MASSON. "Drowsy flighted" is the reading of the Cambridge Ms. But the three earliest editions of Comus have "drowsie frighted" — the drowsy horses that had been frightened.

555-562. A compliment to the singing of the lady in the Echo song.

557-560. Silence . . . wished. If silence could always be replaced by such a sound, she would willingly cease to be.

558. took. Charmed.

565. Amazed. In the original sense of "astounded."

568. lawns. Cf. L'Allegro, line 71 and note.

573. prevent. Probably in its original sense of "anticipate."

585. period. Sentence.

592. happy trial. Trial which ends happily.

598. pillared firmament. An allusion to the ancient belief that the heavens were supported by pillars. Cf. Paradise Regained, IV. 455.

602. for. As for.

604. sooty flag. Cf. Phineas Fletcher's Locusts: —

"All hell run out, and sooty flags display." — MASSON.

Acheron. A river in Hades. Meaning here the infernal regions.

605. Harpies. Unclean creatures, birds with the heads of maidens. Cf. Virgil's Æneid, III. 225-228. — Hydras. Hercules killed the Hydra, which was a monster with nine heads. The plural is probably used here to include water serpents in general.

607. purchase. Booty, prey.

610. emprise. Archaic for "enterprise."

611. stead. Service.

614. bare. Mere.

617. relation. Report. — shifts. Contrivances.

619. shepherd lad. "Probably a reference to Milton's bosom friend, the half-Italian Diodati, practising as a physician when Comus was written." — MASSON.

621. virtuous. Cf. line 16, and Il Penseroso, 113 and note.

626. scrip. Bag.

627. simples. Medicinal herbs. Originally a single ingredient in a compounded medicine.

635. clouted shoon. Mended shoes.

636. Moly. Hermes gave it to Ulysses to protect him from the drugs and charms of Circe. Cf. Odyssey, X. 281-306.

638. Hæmony. Milton invented the name. Hæmonia was an old name for Thessaly, which classical writers considered the land of magic.

639. sovrán. Most efficacious.

641. Furies. The avenging deities.

646. lime-twigs. Twigs smeared with bird lime.

655. smoke. The monster Cacus, a son of Vulcan, vomited smoke. Cf. Æneid, VIII. 252-253.

STAGE DIRECTION. goes about. Tries.

661. Daphne. When she was pursued by Apollo, she prayed for aid and was changed into a laurel tree.

664. corporal rind. Body.

672. julep. Derived from a Persian word for rose-water; here a bright medicinal syrup.

673. his. Its.

675. Nepenthes. A pain-dispelling drug. Cf. Odyssey, IV. 219 ff.: "Then Helen, daughter of Zeus, . . . cast a drug into the wine whereof they drank, a drug to lull all pain and anger, and bring forgetfulness of every sorrow. Whoso should drink a draft thereof, when it is mingled in the bowl, on that day he would let no tear fall down his cheeks, not though his mother and his father died, not though men slew his brother or dear son with the sword before his face, and his own eyes beheld it. Medicines of such virtue and so helpful had the daughter of Zeus, which Polydamna, the wife of Thon, had given her, a woman of Egypt." — BUTCHER and LANG'S Translation.

679. cruel to yourself. Cf. Shakespeare's Sonnet I. : —

“Thyself thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel.”

685. unexempt condition. From one condition no mortal is exempt, i.e. “refreshment after toil.”

688. That. The antecedent is you in line 682.

694. aspects. Countenances.

695. oughly. So in Milton's text; in many editions now printed ugly.

698. vizored. Disguised by a mask. — forgery. Deceit.

700. liquorish. Dainty, enticing the appetite.

707. budge. Fur, probably referring to that used as linings and edgings of academic gowns. — budge . . . fur. Teachers in the school of Stoicism. The Stoic philosophers like the Cynic were indifferent to pleasure and pain.

708. Cynic tub. The tub of Diogenes.

711. unwithdrawing. Liberal.

714. But all to. Except to. — curious. Dainty, critical (Verity); with the additional idea of “desiring new experiences.”

719. hutched. Shut up as in a box.

721. pulse. Beans and pease. Cf. Daniel, i. 12: “Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days; and let them give us pulse to eat, and water to drink.”

722. frieze. A coarse woollen cloth, originally from Friesland.

728. Who. The antecedent is Nature's.

737. coy. Shy without any idea of affectation. — cozened. Deceived, cheated.

739-755. Beauty . . . yet. Warton quotes Midsummer Night's Dream, I. i. : — “Earthlier happy is the rose distilled

Than that w ich, withering on the virgin thorn, Grows, lives, and dies, in single blessedness.”

Cf. Shakespeare's Sonnets, especially IV. and VI., and also Herrick's Gather Ye Rosebuds.

745. brag. Something to boast of.

750. sorry grain. Poor color. Cf. Il Penseroso, line 33 and note.

751. sampler. A piece of embroidery or other needlework preserved to show the skill of the maker. — tease. Comb or card.

760. bolt. To sift or separate the flour from the bran ; hence here “ to make subtle.”

791. fence. Defence.

801. set off. Made forcible.

803. wrath of Jove. An allusion to Jove's war with the Titans.

804. Erebus. The darkness of the lower world through which the Shades had to pass on their way to Hades.

805. Saturn's crew. The Titans whom Jove overthrew.

808. canon laws. Regulations. "Canon law" was a technical term for "ecclesiastical law." — foundation. An endowed institution such as a monastery or college. The line means "Against the regulations of our institution or company."

809. lees. According to ancient physicians the four Cardinal Humours of the body were blood, choler, phlegm, and melancholy (black bile). These determined by their relative proportions in the body a person's physical and mental qualities. In 1594 Nash, in Terrors of the Night, said of melancholy, "It sinketh down to the bottom like the lees of the wine, corrupteth all the blood, and is the cause of lunacy." (Quoted by Todd.)

816. rod reversed. The Attendant Spirit plans to undo the spell by reversing the rod and saying backwards the words of Comus.

822. Melibæus. A name in pastoral poetry for any shepherd. Milton may here apply it to Geoffrey of Monmouth or to Spenser.

823. soothest. Truest.

825. Severn. Ludlow Castle was near the Severn.

826. Sabrina. Geoffrey of Monmouth, Sackville, Drayton, Warner, and Spenser had told the story. Locrine was the son of Brutus, according to tradition the second founder of the British nation. After the death of Brutus, Lochrine ruled what is now England. For seven years without his wife's knowledge he kept in his palace a beautiful German princess, Estrildis, and had by her a daughter, Sabrina. At last he divorced Gwendolen, his wife, and acknowledged Estrildis and her daughter. But Gwendolen, having raised an army, defeated and killed Lochrine. She then ordered the destruction of Estrildis and Sabrina. There are, of course, discrepancies in the accounts. In Spenser's, Estrildis is slain and Sabrina is thrown into the Severn.

835. Nereus. The father of the sea-nymphs.

838. nectared. Nectar is poured into the vessels. Cf. line 479 and note. — lavers. Vessels to bathe in. — asphodil. "A flower of the lily kind, the perfect mythical variety of which grew in the meadows of Heaven." — MASSON.

840. ambrosial. Cf. line 16 and note.

845. helping. Curing. — urchin. At first meant "hedgehog." It was commonly believed that evil spirits took the form of hedgehogs, and urchin assumed the meaning of "sprite" or "imp," as here. From "imp" comes the sense "small boy."

852. old swain. The Melibœus of line 822.

863. amber-dropping. The amber-colored water of the river was dropping from her hair.

868. Oceanus. The god of the water which was supposed to surround the whole earth.

869. Neptune. Cf. line 18 and note.

870. Tethys. The wife of Oceanus.

871. Nereus. Cf. line 835 and note.

872. Carpathian wizard. Proteus, the old man of the sea, who is called a wizard because he could prophesy, and because he could assume any shape. — hook. A shepherd's hook, because he tended the flocks of seals of Neptune.

873. Triton. The trumpeter of the marine deities, especially of Neptune.

874. Glaucus. A fisherman who, having eaten an herb planted by Saturn, became a sea-god. He yearly, it was believed, visited as a prophet all the islands and coasts of Greece.

875. Leucothea. Ino, when pursued by her mad husband, Athamas, threw herself into the sea, carrying in her arms her son Melicertes. The gods made her a sea-goddess with the name Leucothea, and her son a god with the name Palæmon. — lovely hands. Being the "white goddess," Leucothea might well be supposed to have beautiful hands.

877. Thetis. The daughter of Nereus and the mother of Achilles. "Silver-footed," Homer's epithet for Thetis, Milton translated as "tinsel-slippered." "Tinsel," from Latin scintilla, "spark," means here "sparkling," "flashing."

879. Parthenope. A Siren reputed to have been buried at Naples.

880. Ligea. Another Siren.

891. osier. A species of willow. — dank. Damp.

893. azurn. Azure. Azurn is found nowhere else.

894. turkis. Turquoise.

895. channel strays. This line may mean that the sheen of the chariot is like the colors that glimmer in the water, or that the chariot strays in the channel.

917. gums of glutinous heat. Gums made sticky by heat.

921. Amphitrite's bower. Chamber of Amphitrite, the wife of Neptune.

923. Anchises' line. According to legendary history, Anchises was father of Æneas, Æneas of Ascanius, Ascanius of Silvius, Silvius of Brutus, and Brutus of Locrine. Cf. line 827.

929. tresses. The foliage on the banks of the river.

934. lofty head. The source of the river in the Welsh mountains.

934-935. crowned . . . round. Encircled with many a tower and terrace.

936. upon. Groves upon the banks of the river adorn them.

949. gratulate. Show joy in, welcome.

STAGE DIRECTIONS. Country Dancers. The second rudimentary antimasque.

963. Mercury. He was the god of wrestling and other athletic games, of music, and, in fact, of everything that required skill and dexterity. Hence Milton credits him with devising the dance.

964. Dryades. Wood-nymphs. Milton seems to be the first to associate Mercury with them.

972. assays. Trials, tests.

976-1011. When Comus was performed at Ludlow, these lines somewhat changed served as the opening speech; and the epilogue began at line 1012.

976-980. Cf. the song of Ariel, Tempest, V. i. : —

“ Where the bee sucks, there suck I;
In the cowslip’s bell I lie;
There I couch when owls do cry.
On the bat’s back I do fly
After summer merrily.”

982. Hesperus. Cf. line 393 and note.

984. crisped. Curled.

985. spruce. Gayly dressed.

986. Graces. Cf. L’Allegro, line 12 and note. — Hours. The goddesses who personified the seasons of the year; also called the Seasons. They kept the gate of clouds between the earth and the summit of Olympus.

990. cedarn. Cedar.

991. Nard and cassia. Aromatic plants.

992. Iris. Cf. line 83 and note.

995. purpled. Edged with embroidery.

996. Elysian. Cf. L' Allegro, line 147 and note.

999. Adonis. The youth whom Venus loved and who was killed by a boar.

1000. wound. Inflicted by the tusks of the boar.

1002. Assyrian queen. Venus. She is called "Assyrian" here "because her worship was of Eastern origin. She appears to have been originally identical with Astarte, called by the Hebrews Ashtoreth." — Classical Dictionary.

1005. Psyche. The myth of Cupid and Psyche (the soul) first appeared in the second century A.D. Cupid fell in love with her, but she incurred the enmity of his mother Venus, who imposed on her impossible tasks, the wandering labors of line 1006. Aided by Cupid, she overcame the opposition of Venus, became immortal, and was united to him forever.

1010-1011. Two blissful twins. This genealogy of Youth and Joy is Milton's invention.

1015. bowed welkin. Arched sky.

1021. sphery chime. Another allusion to the music of the spheres. Cf. Arcades, 63 and note.

1022-1023. "On a certain day, nearly five years after Comus was written (June 10, 1639), Milton, passing through Geneva, on his return to England from his Italian journey, was asked to write something in an album kept by the family of a certain Italian, Cerdogni, living there, in which already there were the signatures of many distinguished persons of the time. Complying, he wrote these last two lines of his Comus, adding the Latin verse, 'Coelum non animum muto dum trans mare curro,' and his signature, 'Joannes Miltonius, Anglus.' It was as if he said, 'Wherever I go, the sentiment of the last two lines of my Comus is always my fixed belief.' " — MASSON.

LYCIDAS

TITLE. The name Lycidas occurs in the pastorals of Theocritus and Virgil. In Milton's poem it is used of Edward King.

SUB-TITLE. This was added to the poem when it was published in 1645, probably for two reasons: first, the general public needed to be told who King was and what circumstances led to the writing of the poem; secondly, the time was propitious for calling attention to the attack on the Church. — Monody. A mourning poem sung by a single mourner. — by occasion. Incidentally.

1. Once more. Since 1634, when he completed Comus, Milton had written no poetry, but had been preparing himself for the writing of a great poem.

1-2. Laurels, myrtles, and ivy were used to crown all poets — not merely pastoral poets. — never sere. Evergreen.

2. brown. Dark, dusky. Cf. Il Penseroso, line 134 and note.

3-5. berries . . . year. Milton felt that he was still unprepared to write. In his immaturity he was likely to scatter the leaves rather than win himself a crown.

5. shatter. Scatter.

6. dear. Used commonly in Elizabethan English of anything, whether pleasant or unpleasant, that comes home to one closely.

7. compels. As the two subjects name only one idea, the singular verb is correct.

9. peer. Equal.

10-11. knew . . . to. A Latinism, equivalent in modern English to "knew how." King had written Latin verses.

13. welter. Tumble about. — parching. King was drowned in August.

14. meed. Recompense, tribute. — melodious tear. Elegy.

15. Begin then. Cf. Theocritus, Idyl I. : —

"Begin, ye Muses dear, begin the pastoral song."

— LANG'S Translation.

Sisters . . . well. The Nine Muses were born in Pieria at the foot of Mt. Olympus, on which the gods lived. Hence the "well" may be the Pierian spring. But they also haunted the fountains of Aganippe and Hippocrene on Mt. Helicon, and the Castalian spring on Mt. Parnassus.

16. seat of Jove. Jove had an altar at Aganippe. Cf. Il Penseroso, lines 47-48.

18. coy. Bashful.

19. Muse. Poet.

19-22. Here Milton expresses the wish that after his death some poet will write memorial verses in his honor.

20. lucky. Wishing me good fortune.

21. he. The antecedent is Muse.

23-36. "Here the language of the pastoral is used, as was the rule in all such poems, to veil and at the same time express real facts. Milton and King had been fellow-students at Christ's College, Cambridge, visiting each other's rooms, taking walks together, performing academic exercises in common, exchanging literary confidences; all which, translated into the language of the pastoral, makes them fellow-shepherds, who had driven their flock a-field together in the morning, and fed it all day by the same shades and rills, not without mutual ditties on their oaten flutes, when sometimes other shepherds, or even Fauns and Satyrs, would be listening." — MASSON.

23. hill. Cambridge.

25. lawns. Cf. L' Allegro, line 71 and note.

27-28. heard . . . grey-fly. Heard the grey-fly when she, etc. The grey-fly is probably the trumpet-fly, which makes a humming noise at noon, the sultry time of day.

29. Battening. Fattening. It is usually intransitive.

30. star. Hesperus, the evening star. Critics have objected here on the ground that the evening star does not rise, but simply becomes visible in the gathering darkness. It seems clear, however, that Milton had in mind the evening star, for in the original manuscript the line is "Oft till the even-star bright."

34. Satyrs. In Greek mythology the frolicsome deities of the woods and fields, half men, half goats. — Fauns. Roman deities similar to the Satyrs.

36. Damœtus. A name used by the pastoral poets, Theocritus, Virgil, and Spenser. It may refer to some officer of the University.

40. gadding. Straggling.

45. canker. Canker-worm, an insect that feeds on flowers, especially the rose.

46. taint-worm. Some kind of poisonous parasite. Verity quotes from Sir Thomas Browne's Vulgar Errors (Book III, Chapter XVII, Section ii): "There is found in the summer a kind of spider, called a tainct, of a red colour, and so little of body that ten of the largest will hardly outweigh a grain; this by the country people is accounted a deadly poison unto cows and horses; who, if they suddenlie die, and swell thereon, ascribe their death thereto, and will commonly say, they have licked a tainet."

46. weanling. Recently weaned.

48. white-thorn. The hawthorn. Cf. L'Allegro, line 68.

50-55. Cf. Theocritus, Idyl I, lines 66-69: "Ye Muses . . . Where were ye when Daphnis was languishing; ye Nymphs, where were ye? By Peneus's beautiful dells, or by dells of Pindus? for surely ye dwelt not by the great stream of the river Anapus, nor on the watch-tower of Etna, nor by the sacred water of Acis." — LANG'S Translation.

Cf. also Virgil, Eclogue X. 9-12, and Spenser, Astrophel, stanza XXII.

52. the steep. Some mountain on the Welsh coast near which King was drowned, possibly Kerig-y-Druidion, where there is supposed to be a burial-place of the Druids.

53. Druids. The ministers of religion among the Celts of ancient Britain and Gaul. Milton calls them bards because they were also the poets of the Celts.

54. Mona. The Roman name for the island of Anglesey, in the oak groves of which the Druids performed their rites.

55. Deva. The Dee, which flows between England and Wales into the Irish Sea. — wizard. The Dee was supposed to be haunted by wizards; according to Spenser Merlin often visited it. Another legend is that by changing its course it foretold either good or ill to England and Wales.

56. fondly. Foolishly. Cf. Il Penseroso, line 6 and note.

58. Orpheus. Cf. L' Allegro, 145 and note.

59. Muse. Calliope, the muse of epic poetry, was the mother of Orpheus. — enchanting. Orpheus worked by the enchantment of music.

61. rout. The unruly band of Thracian women who tore Orpheus in pieces and threw his head into the Hebrus. Cf. Paradise Lost, VII. 33-35: —

“The race
Of that wild rout that tore the Thracian bard
In Rhodope.”

64-84. Note the long digression in which Milton tries to decide whether after all the incessant care of the poet is worth while.

64. what boots it. What advantage is it? — uncessant. Incessant.

65. shepherd's trade. The writing of poetry.

66. meditate . . . Muse. Compose. — thankless. Not rewarded by thanks, profitless.

67. use. Are in the habit of doing.

67-69. others . . . hair. These lines seem to contrast a life of ease and pleasure with the laborious life of the poet described in lines 64-66. Some critics, however, think them a contemptuous reference to the love poetry of the Cavalier lyrists, Carew, Herrick, etc.

68-69. Amaryllis and Neæra are names of shepherdesses in pastoral poetry.

70. clear. Noble, pure.

71. Last infirmity. The last infirmity to be abandoned. That. That well known. Cf. ille.

73. guerdon. Reward.

75. blind Fury. Probably Atropos, one of the three Fates. Clotho spun the thread of life; Lachesis decided the length of each life; and Atropos cut the thread. In classical mythology the Fates and Furies are distinct. The idea seems to be that only a Fury could be so insane as to cut King's thread of life.

77. Phœbus. An epithet of Apollo, the Greek god of poetry. — touched my trembling ears. Professor Masson thinks that this is an allusion to "the popular superstition that the tingling of a person's ears is a sign that people are talking about him. What Milton had been saying about poetic fame might be understood, he was, as applicable to himself." But in Virgil's Eclogue VII, touching the ear is a method of recalling a subject to one's memory. "When I was venturing to sing of kings and battles, the Cynthian god touched my ear and appealed to my memory." Milton may mean to say that Apollo called his attention to something he had forgotten about fame.

79. glistening foil. Glistening metal leaf, hence a display.

79-82. Fame does not depend on a display of accomplishments or on being the talk of the town. It consists rather in the approbation of God; to attain fame one must live ever in his "great Task-Master's eye."

82. Jove. God. Used here because all the other names in the passage are classical.

85-86. Cf. Arcades, line 30 and note.

After the digression on fame the poet returns to the pastoral proper. He announces the return by calling on Arethusa as representing the pastoral poets of Sicily — Theocritus, Bion, and Moschus — and on the Mincius, a river in Italy near which Virgil was born, as representing Latin pastoral poems.

87. strain. The words of Apollo in lines 76-84. — mood. Style or tone of music.

89-90. Herald . . . plea. Triton "comes in behalf of Neptune to inquire what had caused the drowning of Lycidas." — MASSON. Or he may have come to defend Neptune against the charge of having drowned him. Cf. Comus, line 873 and note.

91. felon. Because they are assumed to have caused the death of Lycidas.

93. rugged. Rough, ragged.

96. Hippotades Æolus the son of Hippotes. Zeus appointed him god of the winds, which he kept enclosed in a mountain.

99. Panope. One of the fifty daughters of Nereus. Cf. Comus, line 835 and note.

101. eclipse. Eclipses were proverbially omens of disaster. Cf. Paradise Lost, I. 596-599; and Macbeth, IV. i. 28.

103. Camus. The guardian spirit of the river Cam and of Cambridge University.

104. hairy. The allusion is to the river weeds floating on the water.

104. sedge. A coarse grass which grows on the banks of streams, a traditional adornment of river-deities.

105. Inwrought. In his first draft Milton wrote "scrawled o'er."

105. figures dim. The indistinct markings on the dried sedge, or devices symbolizing the history of the University.

106. sanguine flower. Apollo killed by accident a Spartan prince named Hyacinthus, from whose blood grew a flower on the leaves of which the exclamation of woe, Ai, Ai, alas, alas! seemed to be represented.

107. pledge. Child.

109. The Pilot of the Galilean Lake. St. Peter, who is introduced here as the founder of the Church. King had intended to become a clergyman.

110. Keys. Cf. Matthew, xvi. 19: —

“And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven.”

111. golden . . . iron. A tradition had gained vogue in the Church that Peter bore two keys. Milton invented the idea that one key is of gold, the other of iron, and that one opens, the other shuts. — amain. With force.

112. mitred. Furnished with a mitre, the head-dress of a bishop. — bespake. Spoke.

113. spared. Through the mouth of St. Peter, Milton denounces the corrupt clergy.

114. Enow. Enough.

115. Creep, and intrude, and climb. “First those who ‘creep’ into the fold, who do not care for office, nor name, but for secret influence, and do all things occultly and cunningly, consenting to any servility of office or conduct, so only that they may intimately discern, and unawares direct, the minds of men. Then those who ‘intrude’ (thrust, that is) themselves into the fold, who, by natural insolence of heart, and stout eloquence of tongue, fearlessly perseverant self-assertion, obtain hearing and authority with the common crowd. Lastly, those who ‘climb,’ who, by labor and learning both stout and sound, but selfishly asserted in the cause of their own ambition, gain high dignities and authorities, and become 'lords over the heritage,' though not 'ensamples to the flock.'" — RUSKIN'S Sesame and Lilies, section 21.

118. worthy . . . guest. Cf. Matthew, xxii. 8.

119. Blind mouths. "Those two monosyllables express the precisely accurate contraries of right character in the two great offices of the Church, — those of the bishop and pastor. A 'bishop' means 'a person who sees.' A 'pastor' means 'a person who feeds.' The most unbishoply character a man can have is, therefore, to be blind. The most unpastoral is, instead of feeding, to want to be fed, — to be a mouth. Take the two reverses together, and you have 'blind mouths.'" — Sesame and Lilies, section 22.

"Our clergy are rather to be called Sheep than Shepherds; they are fed rather than the pastors; all, in general, is fat about them, even the intellects not excepted." — MILTON'S Defensio Secunda, Masson's Translation.

121. herdman. The terms peculiar to a shepherd's occupation are very appropriate throughout this passage because we are accustomed to think of clergymen as shepherds.

122. What recks it them. What care is it of theirs? — sped. Provided for.

123. list. Please. — songs. Sermons.

124. scrannel. Thin, lean, slight.

126. rank. Noxious, pestilential. — draw. Breathe in. The unworthy pastors taught false doctrine, or what seemed false to a Puritan like Milton.

128. grim wolf. The Church of Rome. — privy paw. In 1636 and 1637 English Protestants were much alarmed over the secret proselytizing carried on by the Roman Catholic party. Cf. Masson's Life of Milton, Vol. I., pp. 685-686.

130. two-handed engine. An engine was something cunningly or ingeniously devised; hence, any instrument. Explanations of the reference are numerous. Professor Masson says that Milton was thinking of the two houses of Parliament; other critics mention the two-edged sword of Revelation, i. 16, the axe laid unto the root of the tree of Matthew, iii. 10, and Luke, iii. 9, and the Sword of Justice. John Richard Green in his History of the English People, Vol. III., p. 184, calls it a "threat of the axe." Milton evidently believed that an efficient instrument of reform was at hand.

132. Alpheus. Cf. Arcades, lines 30-31 and note. By calling on Alpheus Milton announces his return to pastoral poetry proper after his second long digression. After the first digression he invoked Arethusa, now her lover. — dread voice. That of St. Peter.

133. shrunk thy streams. Interrupted the pastoral verse. — Sicilian Muse. Cf. Arcades, line 30, and Lycidas, line 85 and notes.

136. use. Dwell, stay.

138. swart star. The Dog-star, Sirius, which during July and August rises at the same time as the sun. Hence seems to have arisen the belief that this star is responsible for the hot weather of those months, and makes people swart, dark. Cf. dog-days. sparely. Seldom.

139. quaint. Pretty or fanciful. — enamelled. Glossy and marked by different colors. — eyes. Flowers.

141. purple. An imperative coördinate with throw, line 139.

142–150. Cf. Winter's Tale, IV. iv. 116–127.

142. rathe. Early. — forsaken. Milton wrote first “unwedded,” and some critics thus interpret “forsaken.” But the change in the wording seems intended to change the meaning to “left alone.”

143. crow-toe. The crow-foot.

149. amaranthus. This word comes from the Greek for “never-fading.”

151. laureate hearse. “Hearse,” derived from Latin hirpex, a harrow, has been used as a name of almost everything connected with a funeral. Here it probably means the wooden support on which the coffin rests. To this support copies of memorial verses were often fastened. “Laureate” alludes to Lycidas, and the other poems written in memory of Edward King.

153. dally with false surmise. Fancy that the body of Lycidas is covered with flowers and elegies when it is really tossed about in the ocean.

156. Hebrides. Islands west of Scotland.

158. monstrous. Of monsters.

159. moist. Tearful.

160. by the fable of Bellerus old. Land's End, the southwestern extremity of England, the abode of the fabled Bellerus.

161. great Vision. A vision of St. Michael, the Archangel. — guarded mount. St. Michael's Mount in Cornwall, on a crag of which the Archangel was said sometimes to appear and which he therefore "guarded."

162. Namancos and Bayona's hold. Places in Spain toward which, according to the fable, St. Michael looked.

163. "In making the Archangel Michael, the guardian and defender of the Church of Christ, look toward Namancos and Bayona's hold, i.e. toward Spain, the great stronghold, at the time, of Papacy, and which, in the reign of Elizabeth, had threatened England with invasion and with the imposition of the Roman Catholic religion, the poet would evidently imply the Archbishop's watchfulness over the church against foreign foes. But the danger is not from without (this I take to be the idea shadowed forth), the danger is not from without — it lies within the Church. Milton, or rather 'Milton transformed in his imagination, for the time, into a poetic shepherd,' therefore says: 'Look homeward, Angel, now, and melt with ruth.' " — CORSON'S Introduction to the Works of John Milton, pp. 172-173. — ruth. Pity.

164. dolphins. Arion, a celebrated player on the lyre, carrying with him great wealth, embarked on a ship sailing to Corinth. When he found that the sailors were planning to murder him for his wealth, he asked permission to play once more on his lyre. Having played, he threw himself into the sea. His music had attracted to the ship many dolphins on the back of one of which he reached Corinth in safety.

168. day-star. The sun.

170. tricks. Dresses anew, makes trim. — ore. Bright-colored metal. "Ore" often means "gold" in Elizabethan writers, probably because it was confused with aurum, which is similar in sound.

173. Him. Cf. Matthew, xiv. 25-31.

175. nectar. Cf. Comus, line 479 and note. — oozy. Wet with sea-water.

176. unexpressive. Inexpressible. — nuptial. Cf. Revelation, xix. 7-9.

183. Genius. Guardian spirit. In this passage, as in others in Lycidas, Milton blends Pagan and Christian beliefs.

186-193. The lament closes with line 185. In the closing stanza Milton speaks of himself.

186. uncouth, The original meaning is "unknown"; and that may be the meaning here, as in 1637 Milton was an unknown writer.

188. stops. Cf. Comus, line 345 and note. — quills. Reeds.

189. Doric. Theocritus and the other Sicilian pastoral poets used the Doric dialect.

190. stretched hills. The setting of the sun had caused their shadows to lengthen.

192. twitched. Gathered tightly around him.

193. woods. This line is often misquoted.

ON HIS BLINDNESS (WRITTEN IN 1655)

2. Ere half my days. Milton's blindness became complete in 1652, while he was writing the Second Defense of the English People. He was thus forty-four years old.

3. talent. Cf. Matthew, xxv. 14-30.

8. fondly. Foolishly.

12. thousands. That is, of heavenly messengers.

ON HIS DECEASED WIFE (WRITTEN PROBABLY IN 1658)

In November, 1656, four years after the death of his first wife, Milton married Katherine Woodcock. In the following October a daughter was born to them. Four months later Mrs. Milton died, and one month after her death occurred that of the child. In the words of Professor Masson, "She had been to him, during the short fifteen months of their union, all that he had thought saintlike and womanly, very sympathetic with himself, and maintaining such peace and order in his household as had not been there till she entered it."

1. Methought. It seemed to me. — saw. It is probable that Milton never saw his second wife.

2. Alcestis. When, Admetus, King of Thessaly, was mortally sick, Apollo obtained from the Fates a promise to spare him if any one could be found to die in his place. His wife, Alcestis, consented, and was rescued from death by Hercules. The story is told in the Alcestis of Euripides. Cf. Browning's Balaustion.

6. Purification. Cf. Leviticus, xii.

10. Her face was veiled. The face of Alcestis was veiled when she returned to Admetus.

INDEX

- Acheron, 127.
- Adonis, 137.
- adventurous, 114.
- affects, 123.
- after the Tuscan mariners transformed, 113.
- Aid of this occasion, 115.
- air, 104.
- airy shell, 118.
- Alcestis, 154.
- Alpheus, 149.
- Alpheus . . . Arethuse, 108.
- amain, 147.
- amaranthus, 150.
- Amaryllis, 144.
- Amazed, 127.
- amber-dropping, 133.
- ambrosial, 133.
- ambrosial weeds, 112.
- Amphitrite's bower, 135.
- Anchises' line, 135.
- and, 104.
- Arcady, 108.
- Arethusa, 145.
- a son, 113.
- aspects, 130.
- asphodil, 133.
- assays, 136.
- Assyrian queen, 137.
- attendance, 121.
- Attic boy, 106.
- awe-strook, 121.
- axle . . . stream, 115.
- azurn, 135.
- bandite, 124.
- bare, 128.
- Battening, 141.
- beads, 123.
- Beauty . . . yet, 131.
- Begin then, 139.
- bellman, 103.
- benison, 121.
- bespake, 147.
- besprent, 126.
- berries . . . year, 139.
- bespake, 147.
- bested, 99.
- blear illusion, 117.
- blind Fury, 144.
- blind mouths, 148.
- blue-haired, 112.
- bolt, 131.
- bosky bourn, 121.
- Bosomed, 95.
- bout, 98.
- bowed welkin, 137.
- brag, 131.

- brakes, 116.
 brinded, 124.
 brow, 126.
 brown, 106, 139.
 budge, 130.
 buskined, 105.
 But all to, 130.
 buxom, 94.
 by occasion, 138.
 by the fable of Bellerus old, 151.
- cabined loop-hole, 116.
 called, 116.
 Cambuscan, 105.
 Camus, 146.
 Canace, 105.
 canker, 141.
 canon laws, 132.
 Carpathian wizard, 134.
 cast, 102.
 casts, 118.
 cedarn, 137.
 celestial Sirens' harmony, 109.
 Celtic and Iberian fields, 114.
 centre, 123.
 Cerberus, 92.
 channel strays, 135.
 charm, 103.
 charnel, 125.
 Charybdis, 120.
 Chastity, 118.
 checks, 102.
 chequered shade, 96.
 Cherub contemplation, 102.
 chimney, 97.
 Chimeras, 126.
- chime, 90.
 Cimmerian, 93.
 Circe, 113.
 civil-suited, 106.
 clear, 144.
 clouted shoon, 128.
 Commercing, 101.
 compels, 139.
Comus, 110, 113.
 concent, 89.
 consort, 90, 106.
 corporal rind, 129.
 Corydon, 96.
 Cotytto, 116.
 Country Dancers, 136.
 courts, 121.
 coy, 131, 140.
 cozened, 131.
 Cranks, 94.
 Creep, and intrude, and climb,
     147.
 crisped, 136.
 crofts, 126.
 crop, 97.
 cross dire-looking planet, 109.
 crowned . . . round, 135.
 crow-toe, 150.
 cruel to yourself, 130.
 curfew, 103, 124.
 curious, 130.
 curl, 109.
 Cylene, 110.
 Cynic tub, 130.
 cynosure, 96, 122.
 Cynthia, 102.
 Cypress lawn, 101.

- dally with false surmise, 150.
Damœtus, 141.
dank, 135.
Daphne, 129.
dapper, 116.
dappled, 94.
Daughter of the Sphere, 119.
day-star, 152.
dear, 139.
debonair, 94.
dell, 121.
Delphic, 92.
Deva, 142.
diapason, 90.
Different pace, 116.
dight, 95, 107.
dingle, 121.
disinherit, 122.
disproportioned sin, 89.
dolphins, 152. .
Doric, 153.
Dost make us marble, 92.
dragon womb, 116.
dragon yoke, 102.
draw, 149.
dread voice, 149.
drouth of Phœbus, 114.
drowsy-flighted, 127.
Druids, 142.
Dryades, 136.
due, 107, 112.
dusky, 115.

eat, 96.
Echo, 118.
eclipse, 146.

eglantine, 95.
element, 121.
Elysian, 99, 137.
Elysium, 120.
emprise, 128.
enamelled, 150.
enchanting, 143.
engaged, 118.
enow, 147.
ere a close, 126.
Erebus, 132.
Ere half my days, 153.
Erymanth, 110.
Euphrosyne, 93.
extreme shift, 120.
eyes, 150.

fairly, 117.
fall, 119.
fallows, 95.
Fame, 107.
fantastic, 94, 116.
Fauns, 141.
felon, 146.
fence, 131.
figures dim, 146.
Fire, 104.
fixed . . . toys, 99.
flood, 104.
flowery-kirtled, 120.
fond, 100, 114.
fondly, 143, 153.
for, 127.
forestalling, 120.
forgery, 130.
Forget thyself to marble, 102.

- forsaken, 150.
 forsook, 104.
 foundation, 132.
 Friar's lantern, 97.
 frieze, 131.
 frolic . . . age, 114.
 Furies, 129.
 gadding, 141.
 garish, 106.
 gear, 117.
 Genius, 107, 152.
 Genius of the Wood, 108.
 gentle, 108.
 Give resounding grace, 119.
 Glaucus, 134.
 glistening, 118, 145.
 glistening foil, 145.
 glozing, 117.
 gods, 112.
 goes about, 129.
 golden . . . iron, 147.
 golden key, 112.
 Gorgon, 124.
 Graces, 136.
 grain, 101.
 granges, 117.
 gratulate, 135.
 great Vision, 151.
 grim wolf, 149.
 guarded mount, 151.
 guerdon, 144.
 gums of glutinous heat, 135.
 habits, 117.
 Hæmony, 128.
 hairy, 146.
 hall or bower, 113.
 happy trial, 127.
 Harpies, 128.
 he, 97, 140.
 heard . . . fly, 141.
 Hebe, 94, 120.
 Hebrides, 151.
 Hecate, 116, 126.
 helping, 133.
 her, 98.
 Herald . . . plea, 145.
 herdman, 148.
 Her face was veiled, 154.
 Hesperian tree, 123.
 Hesperus, 136.
 high and nether Jove, 112.
 hill, 140.
 Him, 152.
 him that left half-told, 105.
 Hippotades, 146.
 his, 106, 119, 129.
 Hist, 102. hit, 100, 120.
 home-felt, 120.
 hook, 134.
 horrid, 124.
 horror, 113.
 Hours, 136.
 how chance, 125.
 hunger . . . heat, 122.
 hatched, 130.
 Hydras, 128.
 Hymen, 98.
 Ida, 101.
 If, 122, 124.

- I hurl, 116.
Il Penseroso, ll. 99, 147-150, 107. ill is lost, 120.
 Imbodies and imbrutes, 125.
 Imports their loss, 120.
 Indian, 116.
 infer, 124.
 innumeros, 122.
 insphered, 111.
 in spite of sorrow, 94.
 Inwrought, 146.
 Iris, 137.
 Iris' woof, 114.
 iron stakes, 125.
 it, 125.
 it recks me not, 124.
 ivy, 139.

 jealous, 92.
 Jove, 145.
 judge the prize, 97.
 julep, 129.
 junkets, 96.
 Juno . . . odds, 108.

 Keys, 147.
 knew . . . to, 139.
 knows to, 114.

 laboured, 121.
 lackay, 124.
 Ladon's, 110.
L'Allegro, 92.
 landskip, 95.
 Last infirmity, 144.
 Latona, 108.
 laureate hearse, 150.

 Laurels, 139.
 lavers, 133.
 lawns, 95, 127, 141.
 leaden, 102.
 Leans, 122.
 Learned sock, 98.
 lees, 132.
 less faith, 114.
 less warranted, 121.
 Leucothea, 134.
 Ligea, 135.
 likest, 100.
 lime-twigs, 129.
 liquorish, 130.
 list, 148.
 listed, 113.
 livelong, 91.
 lofty head, 135.
 loose, 117.
 lovely hands, 134.
 low-roosted, 121.
 lucky, 140.
 Lycæus, 110.
 Lyeidas, 138.
 Lydian airs, 98.

 Mab, 96.
 madrigal, 125.
 Mænalus, 110.
 make us marble, 92.
 margent, 118.
 massy-proof, 107.
 Meander, 118.
 meditate, 126.
 meditate . . . Muse, 143.
 meed, 139.

- Melancholy, 92, 100.
 Melibæus, 132.
 melodious tear, 139.
 Memnon, 100.
 Mercury, 136.
 Methought, 154.
 mickle, 113.
 Mincius, 145.
 mine, 124.
 minute-drops, 106.
 Mirth, 99.
 mistook, 107.
 mitred, 147.
 moist, 151.
 Moly, 128.
 Mona, 142.
 Monody, 138.
 monstrous, 151.
 monumental, 106.
 mood, 145.
 morrice, 115.
 mould, 112.
 murmurs, 109, 126.
 Musæus, 105.
 Muse, 140, 143.
 myrtles, 139.
 Naiades, 120.
 Namancos and Bayona's hold,
     151.
 Narcissus, 119.
 Nard and cassia, 137.
 navel, 126.
 Neæra, 144.
 nectar, 152.
 nectared, 125, 133.
 Nepenthes, 129.
 Neptune, 134.
 Nereus, 133, 134.
 never sere, 139.
 next, 125.
 nice, 116.
 night-raven, 93.
 noise, 89.
 none can hear, 109.
 not unseen, 95.
 nuptial, 152.
 Oceanus, 134.
 oft converse, 125.
 old and haughty, 113.
 old swain, 133.
 Once more, 138.
 On his Deceased Wife, 153.
On Shakespeare, 90.
 oozy, 152.
 ore, 152.
 orient, 114.
 Orpheus, 98, 105, 143.
 osier, 135.
 others . . . hair, 144.
 oughly, 130.
 ounce, 114.
 outwatch the Bear, 104.
 over-exquisite . . . evils, 122.
 pall, 104.
 pallet, 121.
 palmer, 117.
 Pan, 117, 120.
 Panope, 146.
 parching, 139.
 Parley, 119.

Parthenope, 135.
 Peer, 113, 139.
 pensioners, 100.
 perfect, 118.
 period, 127.
 perplexed, 113.
 pert, 116.
 Pestered, 111.
 Phillis, 96.
 Philomel, 102.
 Phœbus, 144.
 Phœbus' wain, 118.
 pied, 95.
 pillared firmament, 127.
 Pilot of the Galilean Lake, The, 147.
 pinfold, 112.
 plat, 103.
 pledge, 147.
 plight, 102, 123.
 plighted, 121.
 port, 121.
 possess, 100.
 presentments, 117.
 prevent, 127.
 privy paw, 149.
 Psyche, 137.
 puissant, 109.
 pulse, 130.
 purchase, 128.
 purfled, 137.
 Purification, 154.
 purple, 150.

 quaint, 117, 150.
 quarters, 112.

quest, 109.
 quills, 153.
 Quips, 94.

 Rain influence, 97.
 rank, 149.
 rapt, 101.
 rathe, 150.
 rebecks, 96.
 relation, 128.
 removèd, 103.
 resemblance, 114.
 rife, 118.
 ripe, 114.
 rod reversed, 132.
 roses washed in dew, 93.
 rosy twine, 115.
 round, 116.
 rouse, 121.
 rout, 143.
 rugged, 146.
 rule, 122.
 rush-candle, 122.
 ruth, 152.

Sabrina, 132.
 Sad, 102, 117.
 sadly, 125.
 saffron, 98.
 sage poets, 126.
 sager, 93.
 sampler, 131.
 sanguine flower, 146.
 sapphire-coloured throne, 89.
 Saturn's crew, 132.
 Satyrs, 141.

- saw, 154.
 saws, 115.
 sceptred, 104.
 scrannel, 148.
 scrip, 128.
 Scylla, 120.
 seat of Jove, 140.
 secure, 96.
 sedge, 146.
 seeks to, 123.
 sensuality, 125.
 serene, 111.
 set off, 131.
 several, 112.
 Severn, 132.
 shatter, 139.
 She, 97.
 shepherd lad, 128.
 shepherd's trade, 143.
 shifts, 128.
 shroud, 121.
 shrouds, 116.
 shrunk thy streams, 149.
 Sicilian Muse, 149.
 Silence . . . wished, 127.
 silver-buskin'd Nymphs, 109.
 simples, 128.
 single, 118.
 Sirens, 119.
 Sisters . . . well, 140.
 slope, 115.
 slow-endeavouring art, 91.
 smoke, 129.
 some, 103.
 songs, 148.
 soothest, 132.
 sooty flag, 127.
 sorry grain, 131.
 soul, 98.
 sovran, 129.
 spared, 147.
 Spare Fast, 102.
 sparely, 150.
 sped, 148.
 spell, 107.
 spets, 116.
 Sphere-born, 89.
 spheres, 115.
 sphery chime, 137.
 Spicy, 96.
 spongy air, 117.
 spruce, 136.
 square, 121.
 squint, 124.
 stabled wolves, 126.
 star, 141.
 star of Arcady, 122.
 starred Ethiop queen, 100.
 starry quire, 115.
 star-ypointing, 91.
 state, 95, 101, 107, 110, 113.
 stead, 128.
 steep, the, 142.
 stole, 101, 118.
 stops, 122, 153.
 storied windows, 107.
 store of, 97.
 Straight, 95.
 strain, 145.
 stretched hills, 153.
 strong siding, 118.
 studious cloister's pale, 107.

- Stygian, 92.
 swart star, 150.
 Sweet bird, 103.
 swilled insolence, 117.
 swinked, 121.
 Sylvan, 106, 120.
 Syrinx, 110.
 taint-worm, 141.
 talent, 153.
 tasselled, 109.
 tease, 131.
 Tells, 97.
 tells his tale, 95.
 Tethys, 134.
 thankless, 143.
 That, 130, 144.
 thatched pallet, 121.
 Thebes, 104.
 then, 126.
 The star, 115.
 Thestylis, 96.
 Thetis, 134.
 this Isle, 112.
 this mortal change, 112.
 this tract, 113.
 those, 111.
 thousands, 153.
 thrice-great Hermes, 104.
 thwarting, 109.
 Thyrsis, 96, 125.
 tinsel-slippered, 134.
 To, 125.
 To live with her, 94.
 took, 127.
 to-ruffled, 123.
 to seek, 123.
 to the shame of slow-endeavouring art, 91.
 touched my trembling ears, 144.
 Towered cities, 97.
 towered Cybele, 108.
 toy, 125.
 trace, 124.
 trains, 116.
 tresses, 135.
 tricks, 152.
 trip it, 94.
 Triton, 134.
 triumphs, 97.
 turkis, 135.
 twitched, 153.
 Two blissful twins, 137.
 two-handed engine, 149.
 Tyrian, 122.
 Tyrrhene shore, 113.
 unadorned, 112.
 unblenched, 124.
 uncessant, 143.
 uncouth, 92, 152.
 unenchanted, 123.
 unexempt condition, 130.
 unexpressive, 152.
 unharboured, 124.
 Unless, 120.
 unmoulding, 126.
 unowned, 124.
 unprincipled, 123.
 unreprieved, 94.
 unseen, 103.
 unsphere . . . Plato, 104.
 unsunned, 123.

unusual stop, 127.
unvalued, 92.
unweeting, 126.
unwithdrawing, 130.
upland, 96.
upon, 135.
urchin, 133.
use, 144, 150.

Vesta, 101.
virtue, 117.
virtuous, 106, 128.
vizored, 130.
vocal, 119.
votarist, 117.

wakes, 116.
Wanton, 94.
Wassailers, 117.
wattled cotes, 122.
weanling, 142.

weeds, 97, 123.
well, 118.
welter, 139.
what boots it, 143.
what recks it them, 148.
what time, 121.
white-thorn, 142.
Who, 131.
wicker hole, 122.
Wind me, 117.
wink on, 123.
wizard, 143.
woods, 153.
worm, 109.
worthy . . . guest, 148.
wound, 137.
wrath of Jove, 131.

yelept, 93.
yon, 102.

Pocket Series of English Classics

Cloth

Uniform in Size and Binding

25 cents each

---

- Addison's Sir Roger de Coverley. Edited by ZELMA GRAY, East Side High School, Saginaw, Mich.
- Andersen's Fairy Tales. Translated from the Danish by CAROLINE PEACHEY and Dr. H. W. DULCKEN. With biographical notes and introduction by SARAH C. BROOKS, Training School, Baltimore, Md.
- Arabian Nights. Edited by CLIFTON JOHNSON.
- Arnold's Sohrab and Rustum and other Poems. Edited by JUSTUS COLLINS CASTLEMAN, Bloomington High School, Bloomington, Ind.
- Bacon's Essays. Edited by Professor GEORGE HERBERT CLARKE, Mercer University, Macon, Ga.
- Blackmore's Lorna Doone. Edited by ALBERT L. BARBOUR, Superintendent of Schools, Natick, Mass.
- Browning's Shorter Poems. Edited by FRANKLIN T. BAKER, Teachers College, New York City.
- Mrs. Browning's Poems (Selections from). Edited by HELOISE E. HERSHEY.
- Bryant's Thanatopsis, Sella, and other Poems. Edited by J. H. CASTLEMAN, Michigan Military Academy, Orchard Lake, Mich.
- Bulwer-Lytton's Last Days of Pompeii. Edited by J. H. CASTLEMAN.
- Bunyan's The Pilgrim's Progress. Edited by Professor HUGH MOFFATT, Central High School, Philadelphia, Pa.
- Burke's Speech on Conciliation. Edited by S. C. NEWSOM, Manual Training High School, Indianapolis, Ind.
- Burns' Poems and Songs. Selected by P. M. BUCK, JR.
- Byron's Shorter Poems. Edited by RALPH HARTT BOWLES, Instructor in English in The Phillips Exeter Academy, Exeter, N.H.
- Carlyle's Essay on Burns, with Selections. Edited by WILLARD C. GORE, Armour Institute, Chicago, Ill.
- Carlyle's Heroes and Hero Worship. Edited by Mrs. ANNIE RUSSELL MARBLE.
- Carroll's Alice in Wonderland. Edited by CHARLES A. MCMURRY.
- Chaucer's Prologue to the Book of the Tales of Canterbury, the Knight's Tale, and the Nun's Priest's Tale. Edited by ANDREW INGRAHAM.
- Church's The Story of the Iliad.
- Church's The Story of the Odyssey.
- Coleridge's The Ancient Mariner. Edited by T. F. HUNTINGTON, Leland Stanford Junior University.
- Cooper's Last of the Mohicans. Edited by W. K. WICKES, Principal of the High School, Syracuse, N.Y.
- Cooper's The Deerslayer.
- Cooper's The Spy. Edited by SAMUEL THURBER, JR.

- Dana's Two Years before the Mast. Edited by HOMER E. KEYES, Dartmouth College.
- Defoe's Robinson Crusoe. Edited by CLIFTON JOHNSON.
- De Quincey's Confessions of an English Opium-Eater. Edited by ARTHUR BEATTY, University of Wisconsin.
- De Quincey's Joan of Arc and The English Mail-Coach. Edited by CAROL M. NEWMAN, Virginia Polytechnic Institute.
- Dickens's A Christmas Carol and The Cricket on the Hearth. Edited by JAMES M. SAWIN, with the collaboration of IDA M. THOMAS.
- Dickens's A Tale of Two Cities. Edited by H. G. BUEHLER, Hotchkiss School, Lakeville, Conn., and L. MASON.
- Dryden's Palamon and Arcite. Edited by PERCIVAL CHUBB, Vice-Principal Ethical Culture Schools, New York City.
- Early American Orations, 1760-1824. Edited by LOUIE R. HELLER, Instructor in English in the De Witt Clinton High School, New York City.
- Edwards's (Jonathan) Sermons (Selections). Edited by H. N. GARDINER, Professor of Philosophy, Smith College.
- Emerson's Earlier Poems. Edited by O. C. GALLAGHER.
- Emerson's Essays (Selected). Edited by EUGENE D. HOLMES.
- Emerson's Representative Men. Edited by PHILO MELVYN BUCK, JR., William McKinley High School, St. Louis, Mo.
- Epoch-making Papers in United States History. Edited by M. S. BROWN, New York University.
- Franklin's Autobiography.
- Mrs. Gaskell's Cranford. Edited by Professor MARTIN W. SAMPSON, Indiana University.
- George Eliot's Silas Marner. Edited by E. L. GULICK, Lawrenceville School, Lawrenceville, N. J.
- Goldsmith's The Deserted Village and The Traveller. Edited by ROBERT N. WHITEFORD, High School, Peoria, Ill.
- Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield. Edited by H. W. BOYNTON, Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.
- Gray's Elegy. Edited by J. H. CASTLEMAN.
- Grimm's Fairy Tales. Edited by JAMES H. FASSETT, Superintendent of Schools, Nashua, N. H.
- Hawthorne's Grandfather's Chair. Edited by H. H. KINGSLEY, Superintendent of Schools, Evanston, Ill.
- Hawthorne's The House of the Seven Gables. Edited by CLYDE FURST, Secretary of Teachers College, Columbia University.
- Hawthorne's Mosses from an Old Manse. Edited by C. E. BURBANK.
- Hawthorne's Tanglewood Tales. Edited by R. H. BEGGS.
- Hawthorne's Twice-Told Tales. Edited by C. R. GASTON.
- Hawthorne's The Wonder-Book. Edited by L. E. WOLFE, Superintendent of Schools, San Antonio, Texas.
- Homer's Iliad. Translated by LANG, LEAF, and MYERS.
- Homer's Odyssey. Translated by BUTCHER and LANG.
- Hughes' Tom Brown's School Days. Edited by CHARLES S. THOMAS.
- Irving's Alhambra. Edited by ALFRED M. HITCHCOCK, Public High School, Hartford, Conn.
- Irving's Knickerbocker History of New York. Edited by Prof. E. A. GREENLAW, Adelphi College, New York City.

Irving's Life of Goldsmith. Edited by GILBERT SYKES BLAKELY, Teacher of English in the Morris High School, New York City.
 Irving's Sketch Book.
 Keary's Heroes of Asgard. Edited by CHARLES H. MORSS.
 Kingsley's The Heroes: Greek Fairy Tales. Edited by CHARLES A.
 McMURRY, Ph.D.
 Lambs' Essays of Elia. Edited by HELEN J. ROBINS.
 Lambs' Tales from Shakespeare. Edited by A. AINGER.
 Longfellow's Courtship of Miles Standish. Edited by HOMER P. LEWIS.
 Longfellow's Courtship of Miles Standish, and Minor Poems. Edited by W. D. HOWE, Butler College, Indianapolis, Ind.
 Longfellow's Evangeline. Edited by LEWIS B. SEMPLE, Commercial
 High School, Brooklyn, N.Y.
 Longfellow's Tales of a Wayside Inn. Edited by J. H. CASTLEMAN.
 Longfellow's The Song of Hiawatha. Edited by ELIZABETH J. FLEM-ING, Teachers' Training School, Baltimore, Md.
 Lowell's Vision of Sir Launfal. Edited by HERBERT E. BATES, Manual Training High School, Brooklyn, N.Y.
 Macaulay's Essay on Addison. Edited by C. W. FRENCH, Principal of Hyde Park High School, Chicago, Ill.
 Macaulay's Essay on Clive. Edited by J. W. PEARCE, Assistant Professor of English in Tulane University.
 Macaulay's Essay on Johnson. Edited by WILLIAM SCHUYLER, Assistant Principal of the St. Louis High School.
 Macaulay's Essay on Milton. Edited by C. W. FRENCH.
 Macaulay's Essay on Warren Hastings. Edited by Mrs. M. J. FRICK, Los Angeles, Cal.
 Macaulay's Lays of Ancient Rome, and other Poems. Edited by FRANK-LIN T. BAKER, Teachers College, Columbia University.
 Malory's Morte d'Arthur (Selections). Edited by D. W. SWIGGETT.
 Memorable Passages from the Bible (Authorized Version). Selected and edited by FRED NEWTON SCOTT, Professor of Rhetoric in the University of Michigan.
 Milton's Paradise Lost, Books I and II. Edited by W. I. CRANE.
 Old English Ballads. Edited by WILLIAM D. ARMES, of the University of California.
 Out of the Northland. Edited by EMILIE KIP BAKER.
 Palgrave's Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics.
 Plutarch's Lives of Cæsar, Brutus, and Antony. Edited by MARTHA
 BRIER, Polytechnic High School, Oakland, Cal.
 Poe's Poems. Edited by CHARLES W. KENT, University of Virginia.
 Poe's Prose Tales (Selections from).
 Pope's Homer's Iliad. Edited by ALBERT SMYTH, Head Professor of English Language and Literature, Central High School, Philadelphia, Pa.
 Pope's The Rape of the Lock. Edited by ELIZABETH M. KING.
 Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies and The King of the Golden River. Edited by HERBERT E. BATES.
 Scott's Ivanhoe. Edited by ALFRED M. HITCHCOCK.
 Scott's Kenilworth. Edited by J. H. CASTLEMAN, Editor of Gray's
 Elegy, Longfellow's Tales of a Wayside Inn, Bryant's Thanatopsis, Scott's Lady of the Lake. Edited by ELIZABETH A. PACKARD.

 Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel. Edited by RALPH H. BOWLES.
 Scott's Marmion. Edited by GEORGE B. AITON, State Inspector of High Schools for Minnesota.
 Scott's Quentin Durward. Edited by ARTHUR LLEWELLYN ENO, Instructor in the University of Illinois.
 Scott's The Talisman. Edited by FREDERICK TREUDLEY, State Normal College, Ohio University.
 Shakespeare's As You Like It. Edited by CHARLES ROBERT GASTON.
 Shakespeare's Hamlet. Edited by L. A. SHERMAN, Professor of English Literature in the University of Nebraska.
 Shakespeare's Henry V. Edited by RALPH HARTT BOWLES, Phillips
 Exeter Academy, Exeter, N.H.
 Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar. Edited by GEORGE W. HUFFORD and LOIS G. HUFFORD, High School, Indianapolis, Ind.
 Shakespeare's Macbeth. Edited by C. W. FRENCH.
 Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice. Edited by CHARLOTTE W. UNDER-WOOD, Lewis Institute, Chicago, Ill.
 Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream. Edited by E. C. NOYES.
 Shakespeare's Richard II. Edited by JAMES HUGH MOFFATT.
 Shakespeare's The Tempest. Edited by S. C. NEWSOM.
 Shakespeare's Twelfth Night. Edited by EDWARD P. MORTON.
 Shelley and Keats (Selections from). Edited by S. C. NEWSOM.
 Sheridan's The Rivals, and The School for Scandal. Edited by W. D.
 HOWE.
 Southern Poets (Selections from). Edited by W. L. WEBER.
 Spenser's Faerie Queene, Book I. Edited by GEORGE ARMSTRONG
 WAUCHOPE, Professor of English in the South Carolina College.
 Stevenson's Kidnapped. Edited by JOHN THOMPSON BROWN.
 Stevenson's Master of Ballantrae. Edited by H. A. WHITE.
 Stevenson's Treasure Island. Edited by H. A. VANCE, Professor of English in the University of Nashville.
 Swift's Gulliver's Travels. Edited by CLIFTON JOHNSON.
 Tennyson's Shorter Poems. Edited by CHARLES READ NUTTER.
 Tennyson's The Princess. Edited by WILSON FARRAND.
 Thackeray's Henry Esmond. Edited by JOHN BELL HENNEMAN, University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn.
 Washington's Farewell Address, and Webster's First Bunker Hill Oration. Edited by WILLIAM T. PECK.
 John Woolman's Journal.
 Wordsworth's Shorter Poems. Edited by EDWARD FULTON.

---

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY

64-66 FIFTH AVENUE. NEW YORK

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

. 0 014 154 028 2

